62.5% turnout predicted for primary

Voters in 34th, 58th districts have wide choice

California voters will select party nominees for November's finals in Tuesday's gubernatorial primary with a prediction by Secretary of State Edmund G. Brown Jr. of a 62.5 per cent turnout or 5.9 million, largest numerically, though not percentagewise, in California primary history.

About 2 million of 3,197,078 Los Angeles County voters will ballot if the 62.5 per cent figure holds true, naming their choices for governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, controller, treasurer, attorney general, state board of equalization, U.S. senator, superintendent of public instruction, sheriff and assessor. Then come nine state ballot measures and varying numbers of county questions.

Beneath the glamor of the statewide office seekers, Long Beach voters face high-interest decisions in races for two open seats in the 34th Congressional and 58th Assembly Districts.

Eighteen candidates including 11 Democrats, five Republicans and one each from the American Independent and Peace and Freedom parties will vie for nomination in the newly numbered and redistricted 34th, firmly in Republican hands in the 22-year tenure of the retiring Craig Hosmer.

The 34th includes East Long Beach, Signal Hill, Lakewood, Bellflower, Hawaiian Gardens, Artesia and part of Cerritos in Los Angeles County. It includes, in Orange County, Seal Beach, Sunset Beach, Surfside, Rossmoor, Leisure World and parts of Huntington Beach and Westminster.

Assemblyman Bill Bond, R-Long Beach, one of the congressional candidates, is leaving his newly numbered 58th Assembly District up for grabs after one term. Four Democrats, three Republicans and an American Independent took the challenge. The new district includes East Long Beach, Signal Hill, Lakewood and Hawaiian Gardens.

Polls will be open 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. Balloting will be done on punchcards as in recent past elections. Long Beach City Hall will add four hours to its Tuesday election day schedule, remaining open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. to help voters with polling place information.

Other districts in the immediate Long Beach area include the 32nd Congressional, 57th Assembly and 28th State Senate.

The liveliest race appears to be in the Democratic contest for State Senate with a fierce head-to-head encounter between incumbent Ralph C. Dills and challenger Robert "Buzz" Pauley, son of wealthy oilman Ed Pauley. A third Democratic entry is Ross M. Miller Jr., a surgeon. Dennis L. Brown, Bellflower businessman, is unopposed for the GOP nomination.

Incumbent Glenn M. Anderson is unopposed for the Democratic nomination in the 32nd Congressional District. Also automatic nominees to the November general are Virgil V. Badalich, Torrance electrician, American Independent, and Frank H. Walker, Long Beach refinery worker, Peace and Freedom. No Republican filed but Long Beach Atty. James L. Wright is campaigning for a write-in vote. He must be given write-in votes by at least 1,500 district Republicans to qualify for the November general election. The district has downtown Long Beach and city area west of Atlantic to Torrance.

Democratic incumbent Mike Cullen is unopposed in his party's primary for the 57th Assembly District seat. Republican challengers are Long Beach Councilman Wayne B. Sharp and Long Beach business executive John D. Waterbury.

Here are principals in the main event 34th Congressional District race:

Wallace Edgerton, Democrat, 40, of Bellflower, returned recently from Europe where he taught American politics and government to U.S. servicemen and dependents as a university extension professor. He claims more academic training and international experience than

Prop. 9 tops 'short' list of referenda

But voters still face lengthy ballot

By BOB SCHMIDT
Our State Bureau

SACRAMENTO — In addition to selecting candidates for November's general election, Californians will be asked Tuesday to make final judgments on nine propositions.

The ballot will be long enough as it is, because of the large number of candidates seeking nominations, and voters can be grateful the number of propositions is as small as it is.

In the 1972 general election there were 22 such measures.

Although the number of propositions is comparatively small, the explanatory pamphlet sent to each voter is still thick, primarily because of Proposition 9, the political reform initiative.

The initiative contains 20,000 words, and they are set in small type covering eleven 8½x11-inch pages in the voter's pamphlet. It is a tedious, complex proposal which invites conflicting legal interpretations and is certain, if approved, to be challenged in court.

Despite its length and complexity, however, its proponents contend it offers an absolutely essential transfusion to a political process made weak from greed and corruption.

Failure to approve it would tell amoral legislators and lobbyists they are free to give the best interests of the people a low priority, supporters say.

Many of the provisions of Prop. 9 are already law, put there, very probably, by a Legislature hoping to persuade the citizenry that further political purification is unneeded.

But the citizenry was obviously not so persuaded, and the initiative was put on the ballot by the signatures of some half million registered voters.

It proclaims that "Public officials, whether elected or appointed, should perform their duties in an impartial manner, free from bias caused by their own financial interests or the financial interests of persons who have supported

MASSIVE EXPLOSION RIPS THROUGH ENGLISH CHEMICAL WORKS SATURDAY —UPI

20 to 55 dead in plant blast

FLIXBOROUGH, England (AP) — A chemical plant exploded in a huge ball of flame Saturday, killing a number of workers and sending a blanket of poisonous fumes into the surrounding countryside, police said.

Official estimates of the death toll ranged between 20 and 55, but no firm count was immediately available. Police said early today that 30 and perhaps 40 persons were still unaccounted for.

The force of the 5 p.m. blast demolished or damaged homes for miles around this Lincolnshire industrial area 150 miles north of London.

Police said that because of the fumes, an estimated 20,000 persons were being evacuated from 10 nearby villages.

They reported that 94 persons were treated at local hospitals — 30 from the factory — Nypro-U.K. Ltd. — and the rest from surrounding villages. Many of the injured were cut by flying glass.

The blast occurred when only a skeleton crew was on duty at the plant. The normal work force numbers about 500.

Hundreds of firemen, policemen and ambulance workers, aided by searchlights and breathing apparatus, combed through the rubble of the plant and the demolished houses late into the night.

The explosion appeared to be accidental, police said, adding there was no indication that guerrillas were involved.

Late Saturday night, flames still licked 300 feet into the sky above the charred and mangled ruins of the chemical works. Belching clouds of smoke were visible 25 miles away.

The control room area of the plant was still surrounded by a wall of flames and acrid fumes, and by midnight Saturday only two bodies had been recovered.

With the danger of new blasts and deadly poisonous fumes, fire fighters played their hoses on two large tanks of ammonia to lessen the fire risk.

The firemen had the situation mostly under control Saturday night, but a spokesman said it might take several days to snuff out the blaze completely.

Special security forces patrolled the area to prevent looting.

Most of the dead were believed to be inside an area of the factory

Israel, Syria begin exchange of POWs

Associated Press

Israel and Syria began exchanging war prisoners Saturday, and delirious crowds in Damascus and Tel Aviv welcomed their men with joy, tears, kisses and flowers.

In Washington, U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim met with President Nixon and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger to discuss the Syrian-Israeli disengagement accord that called for the POW swap (See story on page A-6). The U.N. chief flew to Geneva later and was to take a two-week tour of the Middle East.

In Geneva, Syrian and Israeli generals went over details of the agreement and, in Cairo, Palestinian guerrilla leaders discussed future relations with Israel while Arab oil ministers reviewed their decision to lift the oil embargo against the United States.

Demo rivals vow to unite against GOP

By BILL STALL
Associated Press

The three leading Democratic rivals for governor met amicably Saturday and each agreed to support the winner in Tuesday's primary election when the Democrats try to recapture the state's top office in the fall.

Secretary of State Edmund G. Brown Jr., San Francisco Mayor Joseph Alioto and Assembly Speaker Bob Moretti chatted briefly as they posed for photographers after back-to-back appearances on the same television news show.

No major new differences between the three emerged during the separate 20-minute interviews on KNBC.

But Brown pursued his clan politics theme by contending that "the whole Sacramento scene has been corrupted" by the influence of big-spending lobbyists.

THAT WOULD be cleaned up, he contended, with passage of Proposition 9, the political reform act on the Tuesday ballot which he helped write.

And during his segment, Alioto claimed Brown was "the tool of Indonesian generals and Arab sheiks" because Brown had accepted nearly $100,000 in campaign contributions from foreign oil interests.

Asked about that allegation when he appeared before the same panel of newsmen, Brown said it was "utter nonsense."

But afterward, in a television studio hallway, they were smiling and the mood was decidedly friendly.

Brown said he was pleased with the format, although Alioto commented, "I would have liked to debate face to face."

Moretti and Alioto have sought such a debate for months, but Brown, the front runner in the polls, refused.

Brown, briefed by aides on what his two opponents had said, told newsmen, "I think it indicates the Democrats are together, that we'll do very well in November, and whoever of us wins, Mr. Flournoy is in big trouble."

The political scene explored on Pages A-13, 14, 17.

State Controller Houston I. Flournoy is favored to win the GOP nomination in the primary.

OF THE triple header news interview, Moretti said, "It is in the great American tradition to come out slugging and shake hands at the end of the fight. That's the way it is. That's the way it ought to be.

Another Democratic candidate for governor in the massive field of 18 protested that he was not allowed to appear with the three front runners.

San Francisco executive William Matson Roth parked his campaign camper vehicle outside the studio and he bought a commercial immediately following the news conference complaining about it.

There was a mechanical break-

Poll shows voters in election eve quandary

A special poll taken Friday by Western View-Point, Long Beach, shows that just four days before Tuesday's primary election huge numbers of voters still haven't made up their minds in either the 34th Congressional District or 58th Assembly District races.

Western View-Point's poll involved 325 Democratic and 275 Republican face-to-face interviews in the 34th District and 216 Democratic and 144 Republican in the 58th District.

A poll taken by The Independent, Press-Telegram three weeks ago also indicated a very large "don't know" response in the same races.

It is difficult to compare figures between the two polls since the I, P-T poll involved showing cards to the respondents with names of all candidates in each race. In the Western View-Point poll those questioned were shown cards with only an abbreviated list of candidates considered to be "front runners" by the polling firm.

In the Democratic 34th Congressional race to replace retiring Congressman Craig Hosmer the I, P-T poll on May 10-13 showed a "don't know" response of 54.8. In the new poll it was 53.8.

On the Republican side in the early poll the don't know was 57.7 and in the latest it was still 42.9.

How secure is Social Security?

Costly system wipes out financial future

By WARREN SHORE

The federal government prints a little blue booklet entitled "Your Social Security" which begins:

"Nine out of 10 working people in the United States are now building protection for themselves and their families under the Social Security program . . ."

Do you believe the little blue booklet? The truth is that Social Security can cost you more than $200,000 and wipe out your chances for a secure future.

For the generation of American workers under 40, Social Security no longer works. Rather than adding to the financial future of the young wage earner, Social Security is steadily tearing it down.

Editor's Note: This is the first in a series of articles by Chicago Today reporter Warren Shore, who discovered during his statistical investigation that Social Security rather than protecting and adding to the financial future of the young wage earner is steadily tearing it down.

Consider the following:

—During the last 20 years the taxes we pay for Social Security have grown a staggering 800 per cent — more than 10 times the cost of living rise for the same years.

—During the same period, while the taxpayer's bill for Social Security grew from $5 billion to $40 billion annually, the average monthly benefit check went from $55 to $140 — less than one-third the tax rise and never above the poverty level.

—It is now possible to pay as much as $14,602 in Social Security taxes and not be eligible for any retirement benefits at all — whether you work or not after 65.

—The household in which the husband earns $11,000 and his wife $9,000 annually must pay $32 per month MORE in Social Security taxes than the household of a $100,000-a-year executive.

—During the last 20 years Social Security payment checks have averaged HALF the maximum amount possible in any benefit category. The same amount of money, during the same years, paid to a private fund would have paid for TWICE the maximum in any benefit category.

—The Social Security restrictions against earning more than a poverty wage ($2,880 per year) while drawing benefits remain in full force until age 72 — when more than 99 per cent of Americans are either fully retired or dead.

—More than half of American taxpayers pay more to the Social Security Administration than they pay in income tax — and the percentage is growing.

How could the system, called "a ray of hope" in 1937 when it was enacted, have become what University of California economist Peter Somers recently termed "the biggest single roadblock to the se-

MIT grad with 'wide' interests receives 5 degrees

Combined News Services

Kevin E. K. Tong, who says he just has "very wide" interests has received five degrees simultaneously from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology at Cambridge. It was the first time in the school's 108-year history that it has awarded five degrees to one graduate.

Tong, 24, a native of Hong Kong, entered MIT in 1969 as a sophomore transfer from Montreal's McGill University. He received degrees Friday as a bachelor of science in mechanical engineering, electrical engineering and management and a master of science in mechanical engineering. He also received a professional degree in mechanical engineering.

Tong plans to spend the summer in Hong Kong and then return to the U.S. to work in operations research and planning engineering projects.

Joggers

Two young men set out from Seattle Sunday on a 3,000-mile, three-month cross-country jog to provide medical data on exercise and to raise money for the American Heart Association.

Philip Castleberg, 24, and Heinz Wiegand, 26, plan to average 40 miles a day on their jog to Rehoboth Beach, Del., stopping at about 135 towns and cities along the way.

Heart and long researchers at the University of Washington have conducted extensive research on the two men. Upon completion of their 13-state trek, they will be flown back to Seattle for further testing to determine the effects of jogging 3,000 miles.

The joggers have been preparing for the trip for several years, hoping to show that regular, moderate exercise is a major factor in keeping hearts healthy and in reducing the risk of heart attacks and strokes.

Too fat

Chicago Mayor Richard Daley entered the hospital again Saturday for surgery to remove fatty deposits in the carotid artery to reduce chances of having another stroke.

The neck operation, scheduled for some time next week, is known as a carotid endartectomy. Daley, 72, was hospitalized for 12 days after suffering a mild stroke May 6.

Depressed

William W. Scranton, former Pennsylvania governor and onetime aspirant for the Republican presidential nomination, said Saturday in University Park, Pa., that the greatest crisis facing the nation was the "unsatisfactory public accountability on the part of many officials, even at the highest level."

Addressing 4,200 graduates at Pennsylvania State University commencement exercises, Scranton said he was saddened and depressed on reading the white house tape transcripts.

Flaw

John Kenneth Galbraith, the Harvard economist and former ambassador to India, said Saturday that commencement speakers are wrong when they say Watergate reveals a deep flaw in our national character.

"They are all wrong," Galbraith said. "The flaw is mostly in the character of the President of the United States."

Speaking at the 96th annual commencement at Wellesley (Mass.) College, Galbraith complimented Nixon for helping put the concept of the presidency in perspective.

"We have learned, among other things, that the office is not all that important," Galbraith said. "For a year now we got by, more or less, without a president. Mr. Nixon has been devoting himself, more or less, exclusively to his own survivial."

Except in the area of inflation, Galbraight said, "The good gray federal bureaucracy has run the country, not brilliantly but well enough."

Flygirl

The helmet wrecks her hair and is so hot it makes her eye makeup run, but 2nd Lt. Sally Woolfolk is glad she is about to become the Army's first woman flier.

Miss Woolfolk, 25, graduates Tuesday from the Army Aviation Center at Ft. Rucker, Ala., and will be qualified to fly helicopters, making her the first woman to become an Army aviator, according to Army spokesmen.

Her male counterparts have accepted her "as one of them from the beginning," she says. "I was allowed to maintain my feminity, but the men did not pamper me or give me special treatment. They maintained a perfect balance in our relationship."

Lt. Woolfolk doesn't know where her first assignment will be, but she says one of the first things she will do after graduation is marry Capt. Dan Murphy of Monmouth, N.J. He also is an Army flier.

Suspicious

The black family had been victims of racial harassment, and Detroit police feared the worst when they saw a white youth place a grocery bag on the front porch.

"We thought it might be a bomb," one officer said Saturday.

A 24-hour police guard had been posted after the mother, Maytroit Richards, complained that eggs were splattered against the house, cars driven across the lawn and rocks tossed through windows.

So officers apprehended the 20-year-old youth and searched the bag he left.

It contained $6 worth of groceries, including ice cream, bread and meat snacks, and four $1 bills.

"When I heard about what some white people were doing to that black mother and her six children, I decided they deserved better," the youth told officers. Police declined to identify him.

Ms-understood

Gloria Steinem says she can't understand why a handful of Bennington, Vt., school officials want to ban Ms. magazine from the library of a local high school.

"The purpose of Ms. magazine is to allow women of all ages to tell the truth about their lives — the whole joyful, sad, serious, funny and beautifully diverse truth," said Ms. Steinem, founder of Ms.

"What is it about this truth that a handful of Vermont school officials and parents find threatening enough to suppress?"

The fight began when parents of students at Mt. Anthony Union High School complained to the school board about what they said was objectionable language in an excerpt from Erica Jong's novel "Fear of Flying" in a recent edition.

A special review board — made up of the school's superintendent, assistant principal and librarian — voted 2-1 that Mt. Anthony's Ms subscription be canceled.

New Yorker

Gov. Malcolm Wilson, declaring that "New York is my life," announced formally Saturday that he would run this year for his first full term as governor.

Wilson, who inherited the office when Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller resigned last December, said he would run on his long record of state service — 20 years in the assembly, 15 years as lieutenant governor and the last five and a half months as the state's chief executive.

In the red

Greek shipping magnate Aristotle Onasis has asked the government to cover the losses of his Olympic Airways, which is the national airline of Greece, or to take over the company altogether, Greek newspapers report.

The newspaper said Saturday the government was examining the case but has not yet reached a decision. Olympic Airways said the company was going to lose $30 to $40 million in 1974.

'Breathable' artificial blood told

CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP) — A University of Cincinnati scientist has produced what he believes is a practical artificial blood.

The liquid, an oxygenated fluorocarbon, also may be breathable by a submerged human, leading to several possible medical benefits, he said.

Dr. Leland Clarke Jr., inventor of the heart-lung machine, disclosed the development, now nearly ready for clinical testing, in an interview with the Associated Press.

"We feel over the long run there will be many advantages of artificial blood over natural blood, especially in organ profusion and preservation," the 55-year-old medical inventor said.

"Many thousands of people die each year because they can not get the proper kidney for transplant. I feel its first use will be in kidneys, because it can keep kidneys alive for several days.

"That's just one area. It can be stored easily and does not have any blood types, and it can be sterilized, unlike natural blood which carries hepatitis and other blood-bone diseases."

Clarke said that in the early 1960s he read about another scientist suspending brain tissue in silicone oil to obtain brain-wave readings. He said that later he realized that silicone oil was capable of carrying as much oxygen as air contains.

LELAND CLARK TESTS DISCOVERY IN CHICAGO LAB

—AP Wirephoto

"I went to the lab, took off my coat, poured the silicone oil into a beaker, bubbled oxygen in it, put a rat into it head first and he just kept on breathing," Clarke said.

Clarke said he has also subjected cats and mice to the experiment of breathing the liquid while submerged and they do not gag or choke.

When removed from the beakers, they are held upside down so the liquid in their lungs drains out and they continue breathing air. He said he began serious work on oxygenated fluorocarbons in 1967 and soon he will try liquid breathing himself.

"I suspect it's very much like inhaling a gas," he said.

If future human testing bears out his theories, Clarke said his laboratory liquid could be used to treat sickle-cell anemia, eliminate the bends of deep-sea diving, eradicate the problems of transfusing human blood and be of use during space flight.

Clarke speculated the breathable liquid might be used to wash out the lungs of cystic fibrosis patients and permit use of the lung as a kidney to filter body wastes.

'Rolls-Royce of garage sales'

Mansion auction tops $1 million

GLEN COVE, N.Y. (AP) — A J. P. Morgan heiress has auctioned off the contents of her Long Island mansion for $1,211,535 in what neighbors called the Rolls-Royce of garage sales.

The auctioneers, Sotheby Parke Bernet, said it was a record for house sales and called the prices "fantastic." Their original estimate was that the good would bring from $550,000 to $600,000.

A heavy overcast and early rain kept the crowd down to about 600 serious bidders on Saturday, the fourth and final day of the sale.

The owner, Louise Converse Morgan, widow of the famous financier's son, is now 80 and confined to a nursing home.

London dealers, in the U.S. for a major New York silver sale next Tuesday, helped push up last day prices.

One, Coopman of London, paid $10,000 for a rare William III ink stand, dated 1700. W. E. Brown, an Atlanta dealer, paid $16,000 for a pair of sterling silver pagoda table ornaments.

Silver sales totaled $218,230.

More than 9,000 catalogs, each admitting two persons to the sale, were sold for $8 each. On opening day Wednesday, crowds were so dense that police had to tow away illegally parked cars.

Sparky, Mrs. Morgan's 5-year-old bassett hound, fainted from excitement but was revived and given tranquilizers by a veterinarian.

The biggest bargain of all was not included in the auction — the house "Salutation," which has all the necessities for a swanky family life. There's a dock for the yacht, kennels for 100 dogs, swimming pool, private beach, 22 acres of gardens, fields and meadows, and plenty of garage space.

It will be sold privately at a $761,000 asking price. The Morgan Guaranty Trust Co., which is handling the sale, said two persons have shown serious interest.

Family members said Mrs. Morgan felt the house was too big for a lone dweller. And no other family members wanted to take it over.

The house, designed by Roger Bullard, is a 50-room mansion completed in 1928 at the height of the "Great Gatsby" era on Long Island's northern Gold Coast.

It is cut stone with a slate roof and includes such amenities as a shooting gallery and three kitchens.

The price is low, bank officials explained, because the property is covered by a covenant designed to keep the population density of West Island; where it is located, low. There are only six other families on the island.

They each pay $60,000 a year to the association, a bank official said, and receive care for the private causeway and roads, water and security.

If the covenant were broken, as similar ones have been elsewhere, the property would be worth millions to real estate developers.

Fate, law bind Popeil-case triangle 'no one wanted'

By MOLLY BURRELL
Staff Writer

A shapely blonde in plush seclusion in Newport Beach, a multimillionaire in a penthouse in Chicago, a tall, tan pilot in a rented apartment in Santa Ana. The sides of an importunate triangle, they are bound together by fate and the law in an alliance not of their choice, an alliance soon to be laid bare in a Long Beach courtroom.

Late this month a carefully chosen jury will begin to hear the story behind it all, the case of the alleged $50,000 "contract" that misfired.

There are the ingredients of a grabber: marriage on the rocks, the striving tycoon immersed in his household gadget empire; the stunning blonde who flew the coop and found a new life in the lotus land of Southern California; a poor but ambitious country boy who grew to love high flying and high living.

THE BLONDE is the conecting link; wife to the tycoon, friend to the pilot, accused of conspiring with the friend to kill the husband.

Eloise Popeil at 48 is striking looking, expensive looking. She has been since 1954 the wife of Samuel J. Popeil, 59, whose Veg-O-Matic food chopper-slicer has become a mainstay of daytime TV commercials.

Big blue eyes, long silver blond hair, 5'4", small-boned features, and measurements that enhance her designer clothes, she speaks softly and without a trace of the Southern accent erased after three years of speech and diction classes.

She's a gourmet cook, an accomplished seamstress and clothes designer, a needlepoint addict. She has worked as model, interior decorator and waitress. She's an inveterate part-time student and has completed classes in literature, history, art, and decorating.

SHE ALSO is the mother of two beautiful, straight-A teen-age daughters whose welfare, she says, is a major reason why she now sequesters herself in a $350,000 waterfront home in a restricted enclave.

Half way across the continent, her estranged husband lives in almost solitary luxury in a million-dollar penthouse she decorated in paneled rosewood with red, white, black and chrome accents.

Attended by a maid and chauffeur, Samuel Popeil (Seymour to most of his family for reasons none of them can remember) is something of a recluse since the story of the alleged "contract" broke. For the past four months he has shunned most social activities and is seldom seen outside his prescribed pathway between office and apartment.

HE HAS no hobbies, attends neither civic functions nor cultural events, say those who know him. Accompanied from his front door to his office and back by his chauffeur six days a week, he centers his life on his creation—Popeil Brothers Inc., at 2323 Pershing Rd.

He is smart, energetic, thorough, demanding. He has a sense of humor and he likes to be a winner at anything he tackles, a close acquaintance says.

On the phone he is charming, polite, concise, articulate, and firm.

"I appreciate your concern," he told reporters when the story of the alleged plot on his life unfolded last January. "I have no comment, other than to say I'm glad to be alive...I pay my lawyers good money for their advice, just as I do my doctors. I'd be foolish to ignore them. They advise me not to discuss the matter." Period.

HIS ONE indulgence, according to those who know him, is food.

He is a voracious eater and a good cook, a friend says. He has a kitchen in his plant where a cook prepares his meals according to his directions. He loves to shop in gourmet stores and stock up on the finest money can buy, an acquaintance says.

He drinks martinis in moderation and smokes fine cigars.

He is 5'9", weighs about 170, has brown eyes and gray hair, dresses in expensive, conservative suits and white ties.

He was born in Asbury Park, New Jersey, the oldest of four children. A brother, Raymond, six years his junior, became his business partner when the company was founded in 1947.

He finished the 11th grade in high school and got his first job as a pitch man demonstrating gadgets at fairs and on the boardwalks.

From modest beginnings his company grew to buy out a related business, Feature Products Inc., in 1967. Two years later it incorporated in Delaware.

LAST YEAR sales were $16,664,000 and per share earnings jumped from 25 cents in 1972 to 52 cents, according to Standard and Poor's Register. The book value of the company, according to Popeil's attorney is $12,381,000.

His worth is considerably less than the $200 million reported by Chicago papers, but he's still snugly in the multi-million category.

Things were different, however, in the mid-50s when Sam first met Eloise.

A mutual friend arranged the dinner date with the pretty divorcee who was going to school and working as a waitress to support a young son. The date led to a low-key friendship which surprised none of their acquaintances.

"He was an unhappy man, exceedingly solicitous and kind, generous, protective," Eloise recalls.

"I THINK it was probably nine months before he even kissed me goodnight," she remembers.

Popeil at that time had been divored from his first wife, Julia, for many years. That marriage had brought him two sons, Ron, now 39, and Jerome, who works for his brother Ron's company. Ronco Teleproducts Inc. had sales of more than $20 million last year as marketing and sales adjunct for household products including his father's Veg-O-Matic, Pocket Fisherman, and others.

There apparently is no strong affection between the two, according to a Chicago magazine article in 1973 in which Ron refers to Sam as "the father who really wasn't a father" and tells how his grandparents raised him.

The divorce apparently shattered the elder Popeil's life and left him wretchedly unhappy, Eloise recalls.

"I TRIED TO help him...I had great compassion for him," she declares. "He couldn't help his unhappiness...I'm not sure I helped, but I tried," she says.

After their marriage April 24, 1954, they began their new life in a two-room apartment. Her son, at Popeil's request, went to live with her mother. Two years later, their first child, Lisa, now 18, was born. Pamela, now 16, was born 22 months later.

By January, 1965, the marriage had become untenable and Eloise filed for divorce, charging desertion and mental cruelty. He counterfiled, charging adultery with several men.

They reconciled the following month. Last October Popeil reactivated proceedings, charging that his wife was living with another man. Eloise counterfiled again, asking that Popeil resume the $4,250 monthly alimony and child support payments he had chopped off even before he went to court again.

IN BETWEEN the court actions Eloise had moved out with the girls and settled into a $1,600-a-month rented home on Harbor Island Drive while newly purchased mansion on Linda Isle was rebuilt and decorated.

She left, she told friends, not only because of the disintegrating marriage, but because she felt her daughters would have a better life away from the Chicago scene.

"He is an inordinately jealous, possessive man," she declares. "Much of the time I felt he resented the children because they took so much of my time. They could not have friends come to the house; nor could they go out with their friends. They had to lead restricted lives. It was not a happy scene," she says.

Shortly after she moved to the beach, Eloise met the man who was to become a new influence in her life and that of her daughters.

A tall, lithe Southern charmer named Dan Ayers, 37, was piloting the private plane which she and a group of friends boarded for a Colorado River holiday on Thanksgiving weekend in 1972. They hit it off well, and she agreed to go to dinner with him when he called a few days after they returned. Thereafter the friendship developed and encompassed the two girls who grew to rely on Ayers as a counseler and pal, Eloise says.

She and Dan went to parties, art shows and local restaurants in one of her three cars—a maroon Rolls Royce, a white Jaguar, a blue Mercedes.

Ayers, born in Carnesville, Ga., spent three years in the Air Force after he graduated from high school, then worked for car agencies and on construction jobs in the South and in Las Vegas before he arrrived in California in 1965. That year he started working at McDonnell Douglas as a machinist, overhaul and repair mechanic and company service representative, until last year when he left to work for an Orange County aircraft company. In between, he took flight lessons at Long Beach Airport and got his commercial pilot's license.

His inspector, FAA examiner Willard Marvin, called him a "thoroughly competent pilot...He obviously loves flying."

Along the way Dan married a divorced cocktail waitress named Sharon, who had a young son. The marriage foundered mainly because of Dan's volatile disposition, Sharon said, and divorce proceedings began in Long Beach. To date there is no record of a decree.

After he met Eloise, Dan told Sharon about her, describing her as a very rich and good looking lady.

Among Dan's acquaintances at Douglas were two men who were to become key figures in the rest of the story—Don Reed, 48, of Long Beach, and Robert Peeler, 32, of Cerritos. They met through union activity and a mutual liking for the racetrack.

By the time police moved in to arrest Dan and Eloise at her home January 8, the two men had turned over to Long Beach police tape recordings of conversations outlining the purported "contract" with them as proposed "hit" men.

On the basis of these tapes, and on the strength of their testimony at the couple's preliminary hearing in Long Beach February 4, Dan and Eloise were ordered to stand trial June 17 for murder conspiracy and solicitation.

Details emerged through testimony: a floor plan and key to Popeil's penthouse, Reed's flight to Chicago to case the plush apartment, his subsequent call to Popeil to tip him about the plot, the delivery of an estimated $90,000 worth of Eloise's diamonds to Peeler as security, a 32-caliber gun provided by Ayers.

Since shortly after their arrest, the two have been free on bail: Eloise posted $100,000, Dan, $60,000.

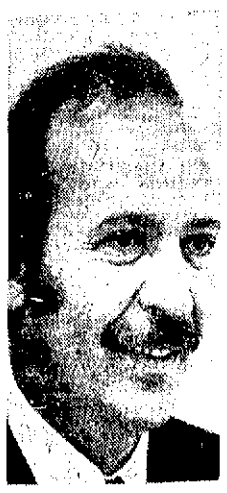

And now they wait, communicating mainly by phone or in hurried conversations at coffee shops and when they meet in court.

Dan puts in a 12-nour day at Chino Airport. Eloise stays home, gardens and sews. Neither will discuss the case, under attorneys' orders.

Lawyers estimate it could be a long trial. If convicted, there probably would be appeals.

Either way, Eloise still faces long delayed divorce actions in Chicago where her husband has asked for custody of Pamela and relief from alimony payments.

Whatever the Long Beach verdict, the misalliance may continue for some time to come, the three lives remain linked in the lopsided triangle no one wanted.

Woman who fled SLA hideout tells story

By STEPHEN FOX
Associated Press

Christine Johnson, who fled to safety from her burning home during a gun battle in which six members of the Symbionese Liberation Army were ku, SAYS THAT SLA leader Donald "Cinque" DeFreeze could have killed her.

"I passed right by him. He could have killed me if he wanted to," Miss Johnson said.

She previously had refused to talk about what happened inside the besieged house May 17, but finally agreed to tell her story.

Miss Johnson said she woke from a drugged sleep about 40 minutes after the shooting began late in the afternoon. Bullets thudded into her bedroom walls. Flames were spreading through the wooden house.

"I could see a reflection of fire and hear bullets," she said. "There was a scream of some kind."

She crawled to the front of the house. DeFreeze, who called himself "General Field Marshal Cinque" in SLA communiques, was laying down withering fire at police outside.

She reached the front door after crawling past DeFreeze and burning her left arm severely on a flaming chair in the living room.

Someone shouted, "Don't open that door! Don't open that door!"

She remembered, "I was so frightened, I don't know who was saying it. I still heard shots ... I just wfon ... then the police grabbed me ... they were dragging me."

Later she found that a bullet, apparently from police, hakqrced her right thigh. She also had a puncture wound in her back but doesn't know the cause.

None of the six SLA members in the house made any move to follow her.

"Maybe they all wanted to die there together," she said.

Miss Johnson, 32, still is shaky over the shootout two weeks ago, and talked in the back room of a friend's home, where she is now staying. She refused to be photographed and said she had trouble remembering all the details of what happened. Chain-smoking cigarettes, she continued her story:

The SLA members were there when she first woke up the morning of May 17, a Friday. They had arrived about 1 a.m. DeFreeze was standing in the hallway, wearing a hunting jacket and carrying what looked like a machine gun. Miss Johnsokud she did not know how they got into the house.

From FBI photographs Miss Johnson identified four other SLA members as being in the house—Patricia "Mizmoon" Soltysik, Camilla Hall uwilliam and Emily Harris.

The Harrises and Patricia Hearst are being sought on state and federal charges and are considered by the FBI to be "armed and extremely dangerous fugitivies!

Miss Johnson never saw Miss Hearst in the house. But the fugitive newspaper heiress—now believed to have joined the Harrises, the last known SLA members, was believed to have been with the couple.

Miss Johnson was positive on the identification of the Harrises—noting they were "smiling all the time."

The FBI said it did not know whether the Harrises and Miss Hearst linked up at any time with the SLA group at the house but werefinitely not in the house during the shootout. In the end, SLA members DeFreeze, Miss Hall, Miss Soitysik, Nancy Ling Perry, Angela Atwood and William Wolfe were killed.

Miss Hal scared her the most, Miss Johnson said.

"She had two bottles in hyknds. Seems like something white was around the bottles. She was walking around with the bottles, following me.

The SLA members had five or six violin cases and two or three leather knapsacks containing guns and gun parts. They began to asxuns from the parts shortly after arriving at the house.

Miss Jxon said two friends, whom she wouldn't identify, came to the house and, seeing the guns, tried to get her to leave.

"One of the (SLA) girls pushed one of my friends and told her to leave me alone, to let me be," Miss Johnson said.

She began tohfrightened.

"Everyone had fsthose guns," she said. "I took those nerve pills. Seeing all those guns made me nervous."

How did she feel when she knew she was safely out?

The slight, nervous woman looked upward and said, "I felt very lucky. I still feel lucky. I could have died in there, too."

After escaping Miss Johnson was taken into custody by police, who questioned her about harboring fugitives. She was released the next day.

A second funeral for Mrs. Perry

OAKLAND (AP) — To the mournful strains of her own music, a quiet, dignified funeral was held Saturday for Nancy Ling Perry, writer and strategist for the Symbionese Liberation Army.

A solemn group of about 75 persons, a blend of older blacks and young whites, crammed into a tiny East Oakland chapel to hear her estranged husband, Gilbert Perry, call her "a saint."

Before the eulogy, the organist read aloud Mrs. Perry's obituary, which said:

"Nancy Ling Perry (Fahizah) was born Sept. 17, 1947, in Oakland. She was murdered May 17, 1974, in Los Angeles. She is mourned by those who loved her, is worshipped by those who love and understand."

Mrs. Perry, who adopted the name "Fahizah" when she joined the terrorist SLA, was killed in Los Angeles with five other members of that group in a savage gunbattle with police and FBI agents May 17.

Her parents and childhood friends held their own memorial service for her in Santa Rosa a week ago.

Her coffin was carried to a waiting hearse for the 20-mile trip to the Irvington Memorial Park in Fremont, where her body was cremated and entombed.

SLA-copter tie belittled

United Press International

A claim that the Symbionese Liberation Army shot down a police helicopter was termed a "little preposterous" by Los Angeles police Saturday.

The claim was in a letter delivered to television station KNXT late Friday and purportedly written by the SLA.

The author of the letter, identified as "B team leader" of the SLA, claimed the group shot down the helicopter Wednesday with an anti-aircraft missile.

A police spokesman said, "It's a little preposterous. There is no indication a missile was involved. It'a case of someone who just flew too low and smacked into the hill."

The FBI, meanwhile, said they had no new leads in the search for SLA members Patricia Hearst and William and Emily Harris but were operating under the theory that the trio was still in Southern California.

"The number of reported sightings has diminished from last week but we have no indication that they have left the area," said John Morrison, an FBI spokesman.

There was one false alarm in the desert community of Barstow Saturday when speculation arose that four persons arrested on the theft charges were connected with the SLA.

Sgt. Jim Hicks said one of the suspects told investigators that the other three — a white woman and three men — had told him they were SLA members.

Bank hostages tell stories to FBI

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Two dozen still-frightened bank employes and customers held hostage for $1 million by two young, desperate gunmen Saturday detailed their terrifying story to FBI agents.

Brian James Young, 18, and Michael D. Madigan, 19, two high school dropouts, surrendered meekly Friday after holding 24 persons hostage, demanding to appear on television, and receiving $1 million in ransom in an abortive suburban Rancho Cordova bank holdup.

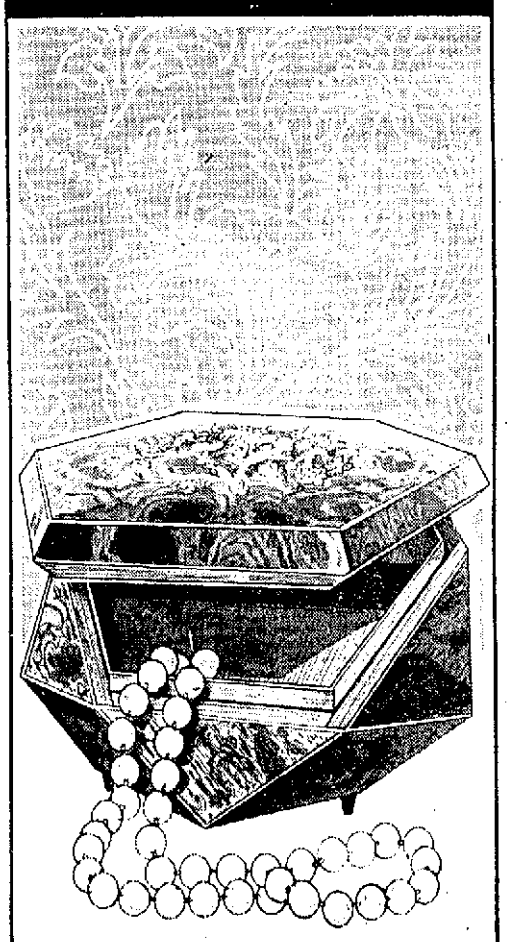

The frightened youngsters were whisked off to county jail here Friday night after Deputy Sheriff Robert Ruh talked them into surrendering.

"Tears came to our eyes at the very end because of the pressure," said Ruh, 26, who during the seven-hour ordeal, traded himself for the release of eight hostages, one a pregnant woman and another a chronic heart patient.

The two, longtime friends and next door neighbors, face a variety of charges, including bank robbery, extortion and kidnaping. They were scheduled for arraignment early next week.

Deputies also took a juvenile boy into custody in the center parking lot during the ordeal. The youth, deputies said, was "linked to the planning but did not participate." His name was not released.

9 propositions on state ballot

Then, having said what public officials SHOULD do, the measure proceeds to attempt construction of a series of spotlights around each official so that what he or she DOES do is under constant public scrutiny.

Under the proposal, public officials of any state and most local governmental entities are required to disclose details of their financial worth, including sources of income, and conform to stringent conflict-of-interest provisions.

Campaign spending would have a ceiling, and incumbents would have a lower ceiling then challengers. Lobbyists would be prohibited from making campaign contributions, and would be limited to making "gifts" (including the purchase of meals or drinks) no greater than $10 per month to "a state candidate, an elected state officer, a legislative official, or an agency official."

Probably as a direct result of the post-Watergate disclosures, political contributions exceeding $50 could not be made in cash, but would have to be "by a written instrument containing the name of the donor and the name of the payee."

Prop. 9 would establish a Fair Political Practices Commission, with broad powers, to enforce the provisions of the measure.

Opponents say Prop. 9 is a classic example of overkill, that the baby and the bath water both go down the drain if it becomes law. Organized labor's leaders are resisting it strenuously, as is much of management.

Their main objection, they say, is that it will prevent their participation in the political process, a right guaranteed by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. It would create another regulatory governmental agency with pervasive political powers, they say.

But not all labor and not all management are as fearful of Prop. 9, and support has come from some surprising sources.

The League of California Cities, for example, has reservations about the proposal but supports it, it said, because it was essential that there be a diminishing of "the disenchantment, frustration, and disappointment felt so strongly by so many people in the state toward their governments at all levels."

If approved Tuesday, Prop. 9 would go into immediate effect, and would apply to the November election.

The only other proposition over which there is controversy is Prop. 5, which would alter the present state constitutional prohibition against using highway-user taxes for any purpose but highway construction, maintenance and administration, and law enforcement.

If the state's voters approve the measure Tuesday, voters in a given area could authorize, at a subsequent election, a portion of the highway-user funds coming to that area for research, planning, construction, improvement, and maintenance of public mass-transit facilities.

The funds would be used to qualify areas for Federal subventions.

Opponents argue that the state's freeway program is threatened already by a scarcity of funds, and that highway-user funds are needed to qualify for federal road construction funds. Reducing state road-building funds would reduce California's share of federal road-building funds, they say.

Opponents also contest the equity of having motorists pay for a transportation system to be used by non-motorists, but proponents respond that traffic would be reduced and roads would be safer for those who elect to continue using their cars, if transit systems are built.

Even if Prop. 5 should be approved, local voters still would have to approve the actual diversion of road funds.

The first three propositions on Tuesday's ballot, if approved, would give the State of California authority to borrow $850 million.

Prop. 1 would permit the borrowing of $250 million to finance the "acquisition and development of lands for parks, beaches, recreational areas, historical purposes, and wildlife management, and to develop historical resources."

Opponents complain that it would cost taxpayers an additional $131 million to retire the $250 million debt, but proponents respond that the need for the purchases is evident, both because of the people's demand and the desire to preserve the property from commercial development. The longer the delay, the higher the purchase price will be, they say.

Proposition, 2, if approved, would permit the state to borrow another $250 million to provide funds for water pollution control. State grants from the money to local agencies would enable those agencies to qualify for federal funds. Much of the resulting monies would be used to upgrade, and in some instances replace, outdated and inadequate sewer systems.

Prop. 3 would allow the state to borrow $350 million to finance the continuation of programs assisting veterans in the purchase of homes and farms.

Despite the high cost of the three loan authorizations, which would be accomplished by the selling of bonds, there is no substantial opposition to them. Leaders of both parties, business, and labor have joined in support.

Prop. 4 is an attempt to remedy what its proponents say is an inequity in assessment practices. Currently, if a property is damaged in a major misfortune, such as a flood, the governor must declare the area to be in a "state of disaster" before the local taxing authority can reassess the property to provide for a lower assessment.

But if property is damaged by an individual disaster, such as a fire, the owner must pay the full tax obligation. The amendment would remove the requirement that the governor first proclaim a state of disaster before reassessment can occur.

Opponents point out that the measure could result in a loss of property tax revenue to local governments.

Prop. 6 would make it constitutionally impermissible for either house of the Legislature, or any of their committees, to meet in secret unless a house votes to do so, with a two-thirds majority required. There is no opposition to the proposal.

Prop. 7 would enable the newly created California Postsecondary Education Commission to employ a chief administrative officer and five deputies who would be exempt from civil service. The commission, which supervises the statwide planning and coordination of public and private higher education, would have the authority to hire people for the six positions without the restrictions of civil service, an authority given by the constitution to a large number of other key state agencies.

Opponents, including Sen. George Deukmejian, R-Long Beach, argue that there are no "unique circumstances" which make it necessary to exempt the six positions from civil service, but proponents say the sensitive nature of the commission's responsibility require "staffing flexibility."

Prop. 8 involves only the County of Sacramento, and would absolve the county from the requirement that all cities in a county must be included in a city-county consolidation.

KURT WALDHEIM, center, says goodbye to Secretary of State Kissinger and President Nixon at White House Saturday. —UPI

Nixon talks to Waldheim

WASHINGTON (AP) — United Nations Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim met Saturday with President Nixon and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger to review the Arab-Israeli situation before leaving for a trip to the Middle East.

Waldheim and Kissinger spent half an hour at the White House with Nixon before adjourning to the State Department for a working lunch.

The secretary-general returned to New York to catch an evening flight to Geneva on the first leg of his trip to the Middle East.

Waldeim and Kissinger told newsmen after the lunch that the Syrian-Israeli cease-fire agreement was discussed as well as the role to be played by the United Nations in maintaining the peace.

They also discussed resumption of the Middle East peace conference in Geneva later this summer or in early autumn.

Neither would give the date of the conference, nor would they discuss the problems facing the participants, particularly the issue of Palestinian representation.

ISRAEL HAS opposed such participation on grounds that Palestinian leaders have supported anti-Israeli terrorism. U.S. officials say Kissinger is seeking a compromise on that issue.

As part of this effort, the officials said, a secret meeting had been scheduled last week between Undersecretary of State Joseph Sisco and Yasir Arafat, leader of the Palestinian Liberation Organization.

However, the session never came off. The American sources refused to discuss why.

These officials also sought to downplay the impression that Kissinger gave Israel assurances of unqualified U.S. support for any retaliatory acts for new Arab terrorism.

Part of the disengagement agreement included an understanding that the United States would give political support to Israel in answering renewed terrorism. This has been taken to mean an American veto of any U.N. Security Council resolution that condemns Israeli retaliation without equally branding the terrorists.

The U.S. officials say each incident will be judged individually against its particular circumstance.

Kissinger said Saturday he had reached no agreement or understanding with Syrian President Hafez Assad that Syria would suppress any Palestinian infiltration into Egypt.

"ALL UNDERSTANDINGS arrived at have been submitted to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and this is not one of them," the secretary said.

Waldheim, who will visit the major Middle East countries, including Israel, in the next week or so, said U.N. forces are ready "and can be there" in a matter of a few days. He was referring to the transfer of U.N. forces from the Egyptian-Israeli cease-fire lines in the Sinai to the Syrian front on the Golan Heights.

Waldheim said "it was quite possible" the U.N. troops could be in place on the Golan Heights within five or six days.

Kissinger said the "principal reason" for Saturday's meeting was to bring Waldheim up to date on his peace efforts. He added that he believes the United Nations has a very important role to play in arranging a permanent settlement.

Nixon security gears for trip

By GAYLORD SHAW

WASHINGTON (AP) — A White House advance team is rushing security and logistics arrangements for President Nixon's imminent tour of the Middle East.

Indications were that the team of experts in fields ranging from communications to protocol would depart this weekend for Egypt, Israel and other Middle East countries Nixon will visit.

BECAUSE Nixon's travel plans have not been officially announced, White House spokesmen refuse to discuss the advance team's work.

According to administration officials, however, Nixon has tentatively set the week beginning June 9 for his journey.

The advance team's work has been simplified by Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's repeated trips to the region to negotiate disengagement of Israeli and Arab forces.

For example, in most of the countries Nixon will visit, sources say, U.S. communications equipment already is in place.

PERHAPS the biggest concern of the planners is presidential security in a region rocked by wars and terrorist attacks for 25 years.

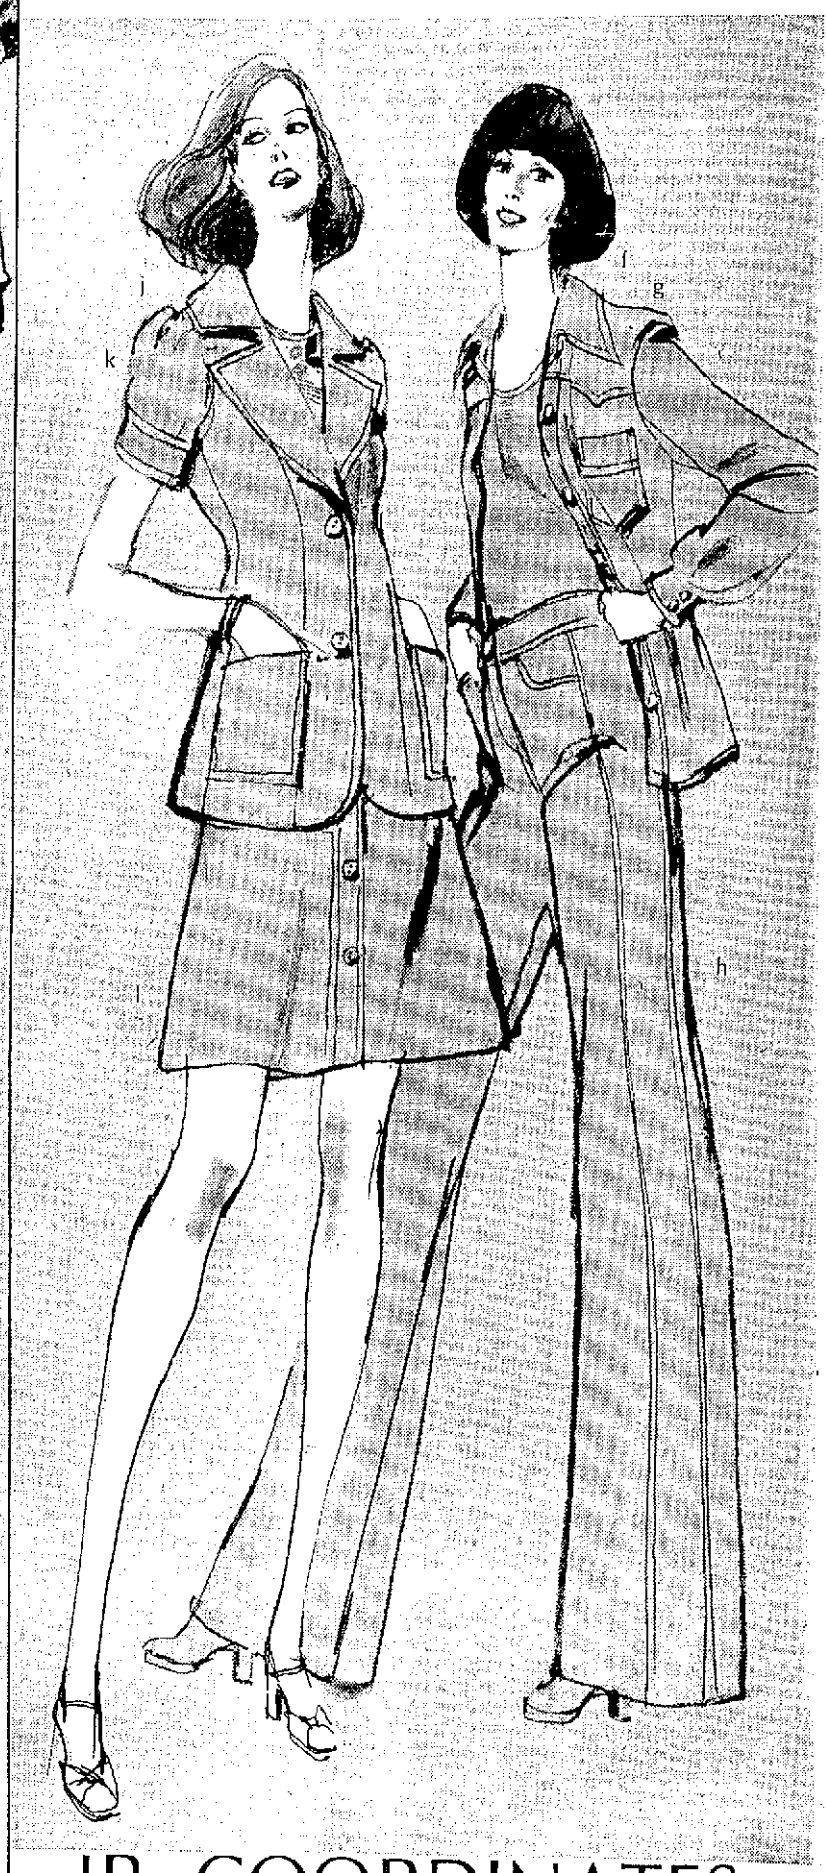

Many of the estimated 100 Secret Service agents assigned to Kissinger's journeys will join the White House protective detail in guarding the President, bolstered by police and troops of the host countries.

The last American president to visit the Middle East was Franklin D. Roosevelt, who journeyed to Cairo for wartime conferences in 1943 and 1945. He also visited Morocco, as did President Eisenhower in 1959.

To combat terrorism

FBI wants more wiretap power

FBI DIRECTOR KELLEY
'New Methods Needed'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The FBI may push for adoption of new wiretap legislation to help agents combat spreading terrorist activity in this country, FBI Director Clarence M. Kelley said Saturday.

Under present requirements, court approval is required in every case involving wiretaps for domestic surveillance. Kelley said new techniques are needed.

"We have given serious thought to this problem and have concluded that our capabilities in this area definitely need to be broadened in the use of certain techniques we cannot now employ," he said.

"To this objective we in the FBI are in the process of considering proposed legislation in the area of domestic wiretaps for discussion with the Department of Justice and eventual presentation to the Congress."

Kelley disclosed the plans to United Press International in response to a query about the extent of domestic terrorism and what the FBI is doing about it.

THE FBI chief, who did not indicate what kind of wiretap legislation Congress might be asked to authorize, said: "The use of this important law-enforcement technique would greatly assist us in our counterterrorist efforts."

"For obvious reasons," Kelley said, "I cannot cite examples of specific locations where we are conducting searches for terrorists but I can assure you that where such groups of individuals are active, we are there.

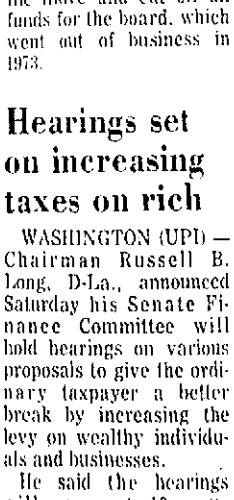

"I can further assure you that in this cooperative effort by all law-enforcement agencies we will succeed. Terrorism in the United States simply will not be tolerated."

Kelley discussed at length the nation's most widely publicized terrorist group, the Symbionese Liberation Army, which newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst claims she joined after being kidnaped by members.

Kelley said the FBI still has no idea as to the whereabouts of Miss Hearst but added that does not mean "that our investigative efforts have ended."

"Together with police departments across the country we are following up on hundreds of leads in the case in a nationwide cooperative effort to resolve this matter," he said.

Nixon to scrap subversives list

HARRY S. TRUMAN
Originated file

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon intends to abolish the attorney general's list of so-called subversive organizations, a product of the 1950s Red scare era, administration sources say.

The White House has drafted an executive order doing away with the list, and Nixon plans to sign it, the sources report.

Atty. Gen. William B. Saxbe recommended the move, according to the sources in the White House and Justice Department.

"The list is irrelevant and legally we're in a bind on it," said a White House official. An official of the department's criminal division has called it "absolutely worthless."

IN 1947, President Harry S. Truman ordered the department to maintain a list of "totalitarian, Fascist, Communist or subversive" organizations as a tool for screening applicants for government jobs.

Four years later, the Supreme Court ruled that no group could be placed on the list without a hearing. Subsequent court decisions blocked the government from refusing to hire an applicant solely because of his membership in one of the questionable groups.

The list dropped into obscurity after the Red scare subsided.

Nevertheless, some 300 organizations officially are still labeled subversive. Only about 20 still exist.

The list includes the Communist Party USA, the Ku Klux Klan and such other groups as the National Blue Star Mothers of America and the Committee to Uphold the Bill of Rights.

THE MILITANT groups of the past decade were never added to the official listing. The FBI and other government agencies have conducted surveillance operations against those groups without formally declaring them subversive. The FBI refuses to disclose its policies and procedures for placing an organization and its members under surveillance.

Former Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson initiated a review of the attorney general's list but resigned before reaching a decision on what to do about it.

Saxbe revived the study last April. At the time, he said the department might consider ways to update and continue use of the list.

But the legal obstacles apparently blocked that route.

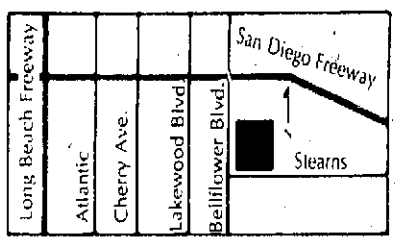

Nixon tried to revive the list three years ago by instructing the highly paid but unproductive Subversive Activities Control Board to monitor and update it. Congress opposed the move and cut off all funds for the board, which went out of business in 1973.

Hearings set on increasing taxes on rich

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Chairman Russell B. Long, D-La., announced Saturday his Senate Finance Committee will hold hearings on various proposals to give the ordinary taxpayer a better break by increasing the levy on wealthy individuals and businesses.

He said the hearings will open at 10 a.m. Wednesday, with Treasury Secretary William Simon as leadoff witness.

OLD AND BLIND: NOTHING TO DO BUT WAIT FOR DEATH

They're old, blind, losing out on $30

By DENISE KUSEL
Staff Writer

She is 87...and waits for death.

She lives alone in a room in a downtown Long Beach hotel. Her only window looks into an alley littered with skeletons of garbage cans, their bottoms eaten away by time and rust.

"I'm trying to get ready to die," she says. "I've got nobody to bury me. I had to sell my cemetery plot to pay for food."

Tears fall freely from sightless eyes, heavy with the bluish fog of cataracts.

Like so many other senior citizens living in downtown hotels, she sits in a chair and quietly waits for time to pass.

"I have no place else to go." she says, "so I just sit here by the window. I used to walk along the boulevard and stop and get something to eat, but now with the blindness...

"A couple of police officers told me I should have an escort when I go out walking. I told them I don't have anyone. I just listen to the traffic and, when it goes, I know it's all right to cross the street.

"They told me they put up signs for old people like me. But I can't see the signs, so I can't read them."

It's only recently that she hasn't been able to see.

"I WENT TO my doctor in February. He gave me an eye examination. He says the arteries behind my eyes are hard and, then, I've got cataracts."

Because she was certified blind after Jan. 1, 1974, she is only eligible to receive $235 a month from the Supplemental Security Income (SSI) program, $30 less than persons certified blind before that date.

This $30 inequity has been "pondered" by the Social Security Administration, an SSI Bureau in Baltimore and at the state level since new provisions governing aid to the blind, aged and disabled went into effect at the first of the year.

Roger Duba, state SSI program officer, says the problem is "an administrative one."

"In all honesty," Duba said, "it's taken a hell of a long time to do something about this. I think it could have been handled better. It's just something that got lost in the shuffle of state activity."

The 87-year-old woman is just one of approximately 26,000 persons receiving aid under the SSI program in the Long Beach-Lakewood-San Pedro area.

Sumio Oto, district manager of the Social Security Administration office in Long Beach, the agency directly responsible for distributing local SSI benefits, said the confusion started in January.

"People who were receiving old-age assistance from the county were converted to federal jurisdiction," Oto said.

"If an aged person became blind after Jan. 1, he would receive $235 a month in SSI benefits.

"ON THE OTHER hand," Oto continued, "people who were already blind and receiving old-age assistance from the county before 1974 are continuing to receive $265 a month in SSI benefits.

"I don't know why there's a $30 difference. It s not right. That's just the way it is."

Oto said about 16,000 people receive SSI benefits in Long Beach. In the Lakewood, Paramount, Bellflower and Hawaiian Gardens area, there are about 5,300 persons receiving SSI and 3,700 in the San Pedro-Wilmington area.

The state does not break down the statistics to reveal how many persons receiving SSI benefits are blind, disabled or aged; therefore, no accurate count is available as to how many are receiving $235 and how many are receiving the additional $30.

The federal government pays up to $140 a month per person in SSI benefits, depending on what category —blind or disabled—a person is in.

The state is required to make up the difference. The problem is that once a person is in the aged category (aged persons are eligible for $235 in monthly SSI benefits) and later becomes blind, he cannot be changed into the blind category where he would be eligible for another $30.

"WE'RE TRYING to change this ruling. We know something is wrong. We've known this for sometime—even before the provision was passed at the beginning of the year," said John White, chief of the disability policy staff at the SSI main bureau office in Baltimore.

"It requires a lot of internal clearances to change the wording in a proposal. It's not just a state problem, but a national one.

"The bureau is preparing a proposal. We're sympathetic, but before anything can change, the OK has to come from the commissioner of Social Security (James B. Cardwell) and Casper Weinberger (secretary of Health, Education and Welfare). After the regulation is approved, it has to be printed in the Federal Register," White said.

"We're halfway through the process now. It's one of those things that takes time.'

Meanwhile, an unknown number of blind and aged Californians sit in rooms in crumbling hotels, facing a common fear: running out of money and being sent to a home.

"I would rather die in my chair here by the window," the 87-year-old woman says.

She closes her window. Folds her hands. And waits.

FTC sets swim pool fraud probe

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Federal Trade Commission said Saturday it will hold a public hearing to investigate allegations of consumer fraud in the swimming pool industry.

The agency said some of the complaints it will investigate are that:

—Contractors lure customers by advertising low-priced pools but then try to talk them into buying something much more expensive. Such "bait and switch" ploys may involve claims that the low-priced pool is inadequate or perhaps unavailable.

—Prices advertised as "special" or pre-season have turned out to be false.

—Guarantees sometimes have conditions or limitations about which the customer is not told in advance.

—Some guarantees do not cover regular work or additional construction that must be done to correct shoddy workmanship.

The FTC regional office in New York will conduct the hearings both there and in New Jersey. The agency said testimony would be taken from consumers, law enforcement officials, the industry and other interested individuals when the hearings start early in July.

Social Security bad deal for most

curity of the American wage earner?"

The answer is that Social Security has not done ANY of what it set out to do.

Designed to act as a "financial cushion which would encourage saving to supplement it," the opposite has resulted. The system now takes so much from the U.S. paycheck, saving is discouraged.

Intended to help the low-income worker, Social Security is instead paying maximum benefits to those who can afford not to work and a reduced benefit to those who must work.

Consider savings first. During the 1940s, when Social Security was first under way, the amount collected in taxes represented only a small percentage of what Americans could afford to save out of their pay.

For instance, in 1942 the average American household, after all tax deductions and living expenses were paid, could afford to put $767 in the bank.

During that year, for every $100 that Americans could afford to save, $3.70 was being taken out of U.S. payrolls by the Social Security Administration for the retirement fund.

Then began the silent squeeze. By 1945 Americans were earning more but Social Security was taking more and taking it faster. Average household saving dropped to $740 a year. Now for every $100 we could afford to save, $4.30 was taken from payrolls.

In 1948 Social Security took $12.60 for every $100 we could save. By 1950 the payroll bite had grown to $20.40 for every $100, and by 1955 — $36.20 for every $100 in household savings.

The tax that was supposed to encourage saving continued to grow faster than Americans could afford to save. In 1960 average yearly household saving in the richest country in the world had slumped to $20 — a dismal 140 per cent drop in 18 years.

That year Social Security took $63.90 for every $100 we still had left. And still the tax was growing bigger.

Last year was the worst in history. Even though the average American household was saving at slightly above 1945 levels, the Social Security Administration took $84 for every $100 we saved.

University of Chicago Economist Milton Friedman has termed the last 20 years of Social Security "a crushing defeat for the average wage earner."

"Where is the incentive to save," asks Friedman, "when such a huge proportion of that saving is confiscated for a retirement plan a younger worker could buy for one-third the price?"

All the examples cited include only the amount of Social Security tax earmarked for retirement checks and death benefit. Billions more are taken to finance other federal insurance plans.

What have we bought for an increase in "premiums" equal to six times private insurance increases?

"Pitifully little," says a spokesman for the Illinois Department of Insurance. "If a private insurance company attempted to sell a plan in Illinois which cost so much and paid so little, we would drum them out of the state as frauds."

Nor is Social Security going to stand still. Beginning this year, no more congressional votes are needed to raise Social Security taxes; the hikes will come automatically from now on — tied each year to cost of living increases.

Today's young workers can look forward to:

— Paying at least $1,000 a year to Social Security the next five to six years.

— Seeing the insurance value of what he buys grow steadily lower.

— Paying the most during his middle years when his federal insurance is worth least to him.

— A retirement plan which will pay him less than half than a plan he could buy on his own — if he can afford to take the benefits.

U.S. mediator to aid in supermarket dispute

Associated Press

A federal mediator has been ordered to help a local mediator settle the pay dispute between nine Southern California Retail Clerks Union locals and supermarket owners, a spokesman for the Food Employers Council said Saturday in Los Angeles.

George Duncan of the Federal Mediation Service's Los Angeles office has been handling the mediation, said Bob Voigt of the FEC. He said that the national director of the Federal Mediation Service, W. J. Usery Jr., sent telegrams to the employers and the unions Saturday saying that national food industry coordinator Nicholas A. Fidanis would join the negotiations in Los Angeles as Usery's personal representative.

Clerks have demanded a wage increase of 50 cents per hour for journeymen who now make $4.68 an hour. Employers have offered a 35-cent increase plus a cost-of-living clause.

Another mediation session was scheduled by both sides for 2 p.m. today at the Food Employers Council offices in downtown Los Angeles.

HIS LEGS AMPUTATED, Syrian pilot Col. Adnan Haj Khudur salutes while being carried off a Red Cross plane returning wounded prisoners from Israel to Damascus.

—UPI

Mideast POWs home

In the first official Syrian comment since the disengagement pact was signed, Foreign Minister Abdel Halim Khaddam declared Saturday night that the settlement was "a real victory for Syria.... We have been able to impose withdrawal on the enemy and to realize huge political and strategic gains."

Then he added: "But this is just a cease-fire and not an end of the war."

The returning POWs exchanged shouts and signs of joy with hundreds of persons on hand to greet them.

In Damascus, red-bereted military police held back surging crowds as the 26 returning Arab POWs were escorted from the Red Cross plane.

The crowd gave a sudden gasp as the first man off the plane sat upright on a stretcher on the stumps of his amputated legs, his right hand saluting stiffly as he gazed straight ahead with blazing eyes.

"Legs are nothing. We are ready to give our souls ..." he shouted. He then insisted on being lifted from his stretcher and placed on the ground so he could bend down to kiss the soil.

In Tel Aviv, the prisoners were greeted with wild cheers and applause from hundreds of onlookers.

Most of the returning Israeli POWs were airmen shot down over Syria. A few others were captured in a hand-to-hand battle on Mt. Hermon on the first day of the war.

The Israeli prisoners said they were unaware of Kissinger's month-long effort to arrange the agreement and were informed of their impending repatriation only on Saturday morning.

The prisoners were careful not to speak of their experiences in Syrian jails, after Israeli prisoners returned from Egypt last January with stories of torture.

"This is only the first group to return, not the last," one officer told newsmen. Syria still holds 58 Israelis, and Israel has 367 Syrians, 10 Iraqis and five Moroccans.

The remaining prisoners are to be exchanged after the generals conclude their Geneva discussions, expected to last no more than five days.

Paris won't ally with tariff pact

PARIS (AP) — France has assured West Germany it will not join Italy and Denmark in protectionist trade measures to overcome its balance of payments crisis, President Valery Giscard d'Estaing said Saturday.

Speaking to newsmen from the steps of the Elysee Palace after five hours of private talks with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Giscard d'Estaing said the two leaders were in full agreement that "return to the internal stability of economies" was the prime way for the Common Market nations to re-establish the balance between them which was shaken by oil price rises and subsequent deficits.

Giscard d'Estaing made a point of saying that the other seven market nations "will be informed today of the detail of our talks."

Oil price freeze to linger on

VIENNA (UPI) — The world's major oil exporting countries said Saturday oil prices may remain frozen for the next four months but later would be linked to the cost of Western manufactured goods to compensate for inflation.

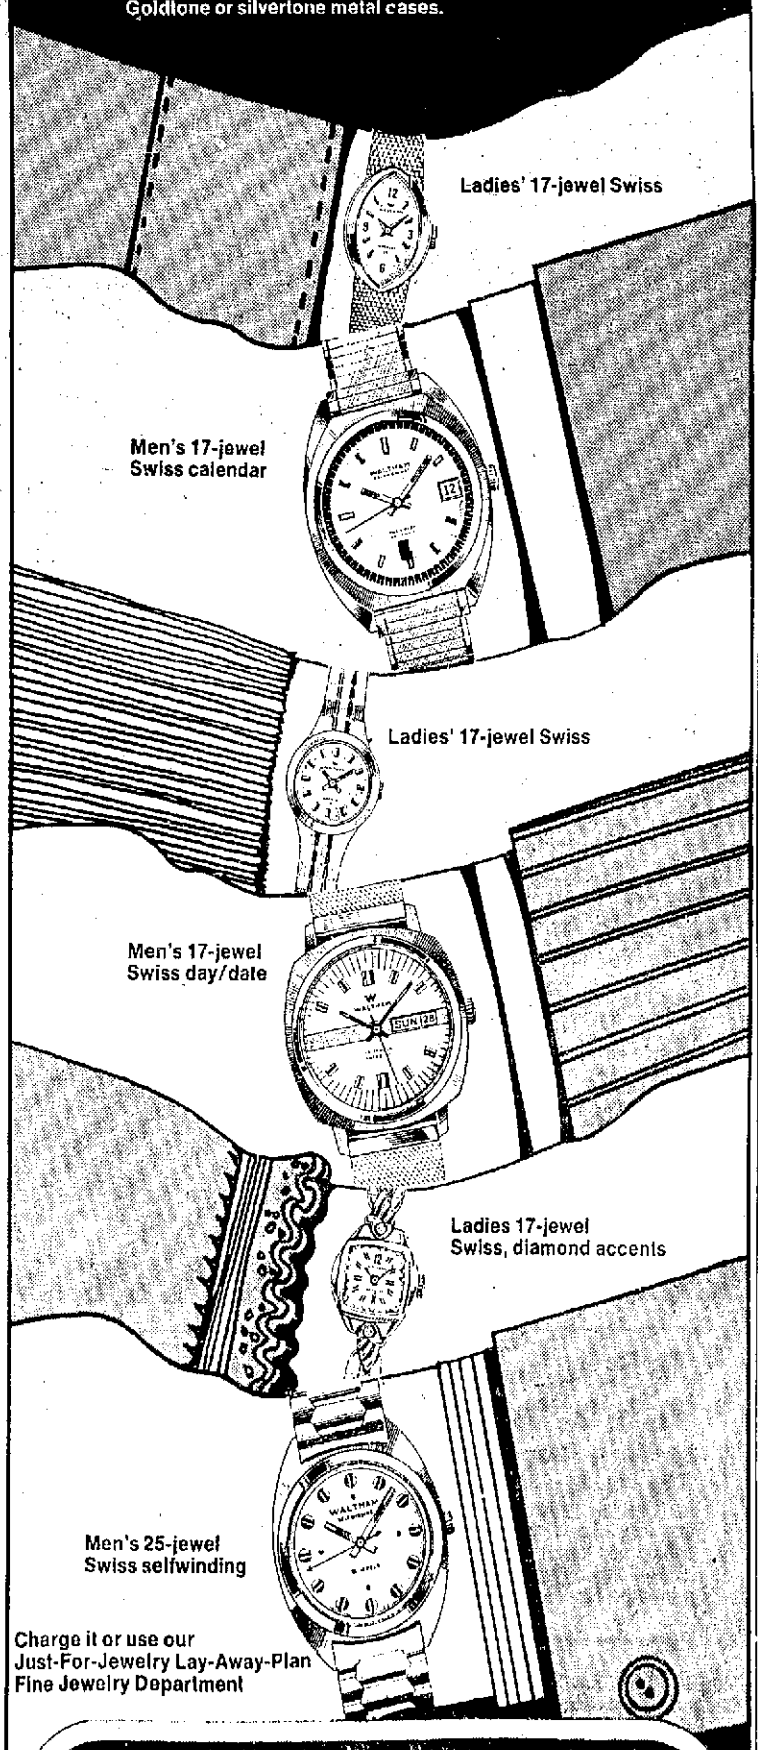

Taxes on Western oil companies operating in oil producing nations may also be hiked to make up for the inflation rate in oil consuming countries, a spokesman said.

"We hope to keep oil prices frozen for the third quarter of 1974," a spokesman for the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries said. "But after that, oil prices will have to be adjusted to the rate of inflation in industrialized nations."

In a Cairo meeting Saturday Arab oil ministers postponed a decision on confirming the free flow of oil to the United States and on lifting the embargo against Holland because the Syrian delegation was delayed. Delegates decided to make a decision after the Syrians arrive in Cairo Sunday.

A MASS of twisted machinery and girders and the skeleton of a building are all that remain of a chemical plant that exploded in flames in Flixborough, England, Saturday.

that took the main force of the blast.

"We don't know how many people are inside, although we know there were about 50 or 60 before the explosion," said the designer of the plant, Michael Shaw, one of the first to reach the scene. "We probably got 30 of them out but we are still checking."

The factory is about a mile from Flixborough, which is three miles northwest of the major steel producing town of Scunthorpe.

One ambulance worker said after the blast: "It was quite colossal. People are being treated for injuries from flying glass from shattered windows in surrounding villages.

"People have been injured by glass in the middle of Scunthorpe, two to three miles from the explosion.

"Ambulances from 20 to 30 miles around have been involved in the operation."

The explosion occurred in what is called Area One of the factory.

Kerry Caborn, 28, a factory worker who escaped unscathed, said: "It does not look as though anyone got out of Area One."

Lawrence Harry, 31, another worker, said he was about 150 yards from the explosion but also got out unhurt. The blast was apparently near the plant's control room, where about 30 persons would have been, rescue workers said.

"There was a small bang — then a huge explosion," Harry said.

"Everything went as black as hell. We were blown off our feet and were wandering around in a daze. One of our friends was missing so we went back inside to get him. There was nothing working in the plant. It was just a shell."

The man rescued by Harry and Caborn was reported to be in a hospital with serious injuries.

Shaw said the factory was "completely wrecked." He estimated damage on the 70 acre site at $120 million.

The plant makes a substance used in the manufacturer of nylon.

Homes near the plant were demolished and houses in the village itself were severely damaged.

Women staggered out of their homes with blood streaming down their faces from cuts caused by smashed window glass.

Four villages near the plant were evacuated as a cloud of toxic smoke swept the area.

A spokesman at the General Hospital in Scunthorpe — which has a population of 48,000 — said it had treated 62 persons and was keeping 10 of them overnight.

"All the injured seem to come from houses badly hit by the blast," the spokesman said.

Dozens of persons in surrounding villages reported lucky escapes.

One at Keadby said he normally has a Saturday afternoon nap on the living room sofa, but this Saturday had just gone out when the plant blew up. Dead slivers of glass from a window hurtled through the room, embedding themselves like daggers in the sofa and walls.

Arsenal crews saved by time

RADFORD, Va. (UPI) — The almost miraculous lack of fatalities when an explosion devastated a TNT assembly line at the Army's Radford Arsenal was probably due to a shift change at the time of the blast, an official said Saturday.

"We were very fortunate," plant spokesman William Coughlin said. "We were having a shift change when it occured, and not many workers were inside."

Sixty one persons were injured Friday when the blast rocked a TNT assembly line building at the arsenal.

It sent concrete bricks arching through the air "like they were feathers."

Pipes, three to six inches in diameter and two to six feet long, were found embedded in the ground a half mile from the blast scene, one worker said.

Damage at the plant, one of the largest munitions factories in the country, was estimated at $20 million.

The most seriously injured was Mevin Alexander of nearby Draper, Va., a plant worker who was apparently struck by an object several hundred yards from the explosion. His leg had to be amputated.

Coughlin said investigators began probing the ruins of the TNT area to try to determine the cause of the explosion.

"Whether or not they can pinpoint it, I don't know," he said.

The TNT area, about a square mile, was cordoned off Saturday. Coughlin said a decision would have to be made to determine whether to save the demolished area or just "leave it go."

One worker said he was in the arsenal at the time of the explosion, 4:21 p.m. "First I felt a quiver then I heard a rumble, then a bang, bang, and then somebody hollered 'Hit the deck!'" he said.

Another worker said heavy concrete bricks were "blown through the air like they were feathers."

Coughlin said most of the injuries were caused by the explosion's "overblast," which blew out windows, cutting passers-by with shards of glass.

The Radford Arsenal employes about 4,000 persons on three shifts.

Police nab marijuana cache, 3 men

SAN BERNARDINO (AP)—Three men have been arrested and more than 500 pounds of marijuana confiscated after a two-month undercover investigation in San Bernardino County, authorities said Saturday.

Sgt. Walter Colfer of the San Bernardino County Sheriff's office said the arrests were made Friday afternoon in the parking lot of an Upland bar after agents bought about 24 pounds of a substance identified as marijuana.

Jimmy Sotolo, 31, of Fontana was booked for investigation of carrying a loaded firearm and sale of marijuana; James Lee, 31, Fontana, for investigation of conspiracy to sell marijuana and sale of marijuana; and Dennis E. Herron, 36, Riverside, of conspiracy to transport and sell marijuana.

Demo claims 'rip-off' of poor

Nixon economic policy hit

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Democratic congressional spokesman accused the Nixon administration Saturday of undermining the quality of life of two-thirds of the nation by following passive economic policies.

Throughout the administration, Rep. Henry S. Reuss of Wisconsin said, there has been "a rip-off of the vast majority of American families who try to make a go of it on incomes of $15,000 a year or less."

Reuss, a member of the Senate-House Economic Committee, spoke on CBS in an equal-time rebuttal to President Nixon's May 25 radio speech.

He quoted Nixon's statement that large wage increases and an over-rapid expansion of the economy were the principal dangers and that some increase in unemployment might be inevitable.

"We Democrats reject this passive attitude towards an economic crisis which is undermining the expectations and quality of life of millions of average-income Americans — at least two-thirds of a nation," Reuss said.

He said a positive policy is needed to combat rising joblessness, worsening inflation and an inequitable tax structure.

He said that the political scandals of Watergate already have led to profound disaffection among citizens and that "to allow the economic situation to deteriorate still further is the surest way to extremism and disaster."

A 20-year trend that saw a greater share of the nation's income going to low- and middle-income families has been reversed, Reuss said, adding:

"Under the Nixon administration economic policies, the rich indeed got richer, relatively speaking, and the poor got poorer, representing a transfer of more than $10 billion a year from the bottom three-fifths of our nation's families to the top one-fifth."

Reuss said that while Nixon was predicting inflation would taper off, Chairman Arthur Burns of the Federal Reserve Board cautioned that inflation is so severe as to jeopardize the country's future.

Reuss proposed tax cuts for poor and middle-income people, an end to inducements to export scarce materials and creation of public service jobs to combat the 5 per cent unemployment rate.

Chinese medicines 'hazard'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Food and Drug Administration Saturday warned against the use of imported Chinese herbal medicines that may cause a fatal blood disease.

The medicines in question contain phenylbutazone, a powerful and potentially dangerous drug that may produce the blood disorder called agranulocytosis, the FDA said.

Four known cases of agranulocytosis, which causes a shortage of infection-fighting white blood cells, have been confirmed recently in the San Francisco Bay area, the FDA said. All four patients had been taking one or more Chinese herbal medications found to contain 25 to 30 milligrams per tablet of phenylbutazone. One patient was reported in critical condition.

THE FDA said it has alerted U.S. Customs agents to be on the lookout for the medications which enter the U.S. illegally, generally in small quantities. The products may be sold over the counter at grocery stores in Chinese communities in major U.S. cities.

Phenylbutazone is legally available in this country but only on prescription and should be used under close supervision of a physician, the FDA said.

The products subject to the FDA alert are hard round black or brown pills, approximately one-quarter inch in diameter, sealed in plastic bags or packaged in glass or plastic jars or bottles.

The Nan Lien Pharmaceutical Co. Ltd. is listed as manufacturer of three different brands: Long Life Brand, Ginseng Hui Sheng Tsaitsaowan; Sanlungpai, Ginseng Hui Sheng Tsaitsaowan; and Chuifong Toukuwan Nan Lien.

New law sets up institute on aging

Russ bar many at embassy

Even diplomats get harassed outside U.S. Moscow office

By HEDRICK SMITH
New York Times Service

MOSCOW — Soviet policemen reportedly have tightened controls and stepped up harassment around the American Embassy, intercepting and sometimes holding and interrogating Soviet citizens, Americans and even diplomats trying to enter the embassy.

"There are virtually daily incidents, daily drag-aways," complained one American Embassy official. "This crude treatment is hardly in keeping with the spirit of detente. We consider these denials of access as violations of the Soviet-American consular convention."

SATURDAY, gray-uniformed militia guards stopped Arnold Ozolins, an American seaman who came here in 1962 and was forced to take out a Soviet passport as a condition of visiting his elderly mother in Riga.

Ozolins's wife and family live in Maspeth, N.Y., and he has been trying in vain to get back to them in America for years. He was stopped and interrogated for about 15 minutes about entering the embassy, although consular officials consider him an American citizen entitled to free access.

Friday, Soviet guards physically blocked Alexander Brenner, scientific counselor of the West German Embassy, when he was going to obtain an American visa. Guards held him while questioning him about whom he was going to see and why.

TWO WEEKS ago, embassy officers had to go to the rescue of Dean C. Hoxsey, an American communist, who was being dragged away by four militiamen, as he was shouting, "Help me! Help me! I am an American." After living here since 1957, Hoxsey said he wanted to return to the United States.

Scores of other cases have not come to light, but Soviet citizens have told American journalists and embassy officials that they have been blocked and forcibly taken away for long interrogations at booths and in cellars of houses within a block of the embassy, some right around the corner.

IN MANY of these cases, Soviet citizens and embassy officials say, the people involved had written invitations from the American consulate inviting them to come to the embassy on consular matters, such as getting in touch with relatives in America, seeking lost relatives, applying for visas or inquiring about possible American citizenship.

In the Soviet Union, such invitations are necessary for access to almost any apartment building where foreigners live or to almost any embassy compound. Without them, Soviet citizens are routinely turned back by guards. Even with them, Soviet citizens report, they are turned back.

"THE GUARDS told me I must be crazy trying to go into the American Embassy," one young Russian remarked. "They accused me of picking up my invitation card off the street. They took it away from me and warned me never to try to go back to the embassy again. They told me that if I tried to contact the embassy again, they would take away my permission to live in Moscow and move me out to Siberia or somewhere."

Medical records

My former doctor, Philip Levey of Los Angeles, died in 1966 and I'm trying to find the medical records he kept on me. Dr. Levey was my physician for 40 years and he is the only one who diagnosed all of my illnesses. I'm scheduled to have an operation soon and my current doctor would like to have those records. Can ACTION LINE help? L.N., Garden Grove.

The records apparently have been destroyed. ACTION LINE located a former colleague of Dr. Levey's and he said attempts were made after the doctor's death in 1966 to notify some of his patients that they should arrange to have their records transferred to doctors they had switched to. He tried to contact Dr. Levey's widow and his former nurse to determine if any of the records still existed, but he was unable to locate either one of them. There is no law requiring a doctor or his survivors to keep such records. If your doctor dies or retires, you should immediately ask another physician to request the transfer of your records. Medical files will be sent only to another doctor.

Guarantee

In June 1972 I purchased two new tires from the White Front Store in Anaheim. The tires were guaranteed for 30,000 miles. The tires were completely worn out after 12,000 miles. In December 1973 I brought the tires back to the store and showed them their condition. They agreed to reimburse me when I had the tires replaced. I had the tires replaced and turned in all of the necessary paperwork but they said it would take 90 days to reimburse me. It is now over 90 days and I still do not have my reimbursement. Could ACTION LINE please help? C.B., Buena Park.

ACTION LINE contacted White Front's central customer service office in Los Angeles and your reimbursement is immediately being processed by the customer service manager. The delay was due to a heavy backlog of work in the customer service office, according to an office spokesman.

Ramps

Due to an automobile accident, I am a quadriplegic. I live a block from the Bay Shore Library in Belmont Shore, but I can't use this branch because it has no entrance ramp for wheel chairs. I think there should be a way for handicapped individuals to use such facilities. A.S., Long Beach.

All of the city officials we talked to agreed with you, but unfortunately the layout of the Bay Shore branch, which is located on a very narrow lot, makes the installation of a ramp there virtually impossible. At the request of Alice Appell, assistant librarian for branch services, a city engineer conducted a study of the building and concluded that a ramp there would not meet safety standards. The building code requires such ramps to be of a certain width and length and there isn't enough room at the front of the building. A ramp at the back would extend into an alley that has heavy traffic. The Bay Shore branch was built several years ago before the passage of state and federal regulations requiring ramps or ground-level entrances in public buildings. Many of the other branches have such features. The closest one to your home is the Alamitos branch at 1836 E. Third St. The new main library, currently under construction in the Downtown area, will be readily accessible to handicapped persons and the aisles will be wide enough to accommodate wheel chairs.

REACTION

On your item on U.S. Navy ships named after women, a cat-o-nine-tails to the Navy Research Branch in Washington who fed you that bilge. How did they miss the USS Isabel. She was named for Isabel Dodge of the automobile family and she was sold to the Navy by the Dodges for the traditional $1 while still under construction with the proviso that she retain the name of Isabel. She was commissioned in 1917 and operated on antisubmarine patrols during World War I, then sent to join the U.S. Asiatic Fleet. I went aboard the USS Isabel in Tsingtao, China, in 1940 and served aboard her until 1943. Even though the research branch has lost or misplaced the Isabel, she is remembered by me as the finest ship I ever served on and no crew was ever better respected. J.H., Long Beach.

any candidate in the field and slogans, "Represents people, not power."

Henry Schultz, Democrat, 59, attorney, an executive of the Family Health Program, strong advocate of guaranteed full health care through a federal health service, says the district deserves "a representative of maturity and experience who has interacted with many levels of the federal government.'

Jared Sloan, Democrat, 33, architect, says Congress badly needs the unique skills and background of an architect," and people are fed up with professional politicians. He served in the Peace Corps in 1970 and 1971.

Virginia Mozingo Waters, Democrat, 54, businesswoman-educator, has run for office three times before, sees this race as a test case for a woman candidate in "The year of women." Don Phillips, Republican, 48, Long Beach councilman, owner of chicken pie shops. Campaign dominated by calls for ending divisiveness among party candidates and gleaning of endorsements including those of Hosmer's wife and his long-time campaign manager, C.L. "Slim" Fowler.

Bill Semeraro, Republican, 68, retired, engaged in no press campaigning.

John Philip Sousa IV, Republican, 26, great grandson of the famed march composer; four years' Air Force service; served as an environmental research consultant and political campaign consultant; was senior area director for the county GOP.

Member of HEW national advisory committee on career education and American Management Assn. Planning Council.

James Manis, American Independent party, corporate administrative assistant, Westminster, and John S. Donohue, Peace and Freedom party, refinery worker, complete the 34th District candidate field.

Assembly candidates, 58th District, are:

Fred W. Chel, Democrat, 44, attorney, was his party's nominee for the seat against Bond in 1972. Steered clear of press campaigning to avoid party divisiveness; doctorate of law from UCLA Law School; Long Beach practice since 1955; member of American, state, county and local bar associations; was volunteer attorney for Free Clinic.

Clarence M. Gregory, Democrat, 41, president of UAW Local 148, McDonnell Douglas, charges the average family is being driven into poverty "by Nixon's economic managers" and says inflation can be solved by government putting people interests ahead of big business. For strict regulation of the oil industry.

Ernie Kell, Democrat, 45, businessman-general contractor, proposes extensive electoral reform in a study he financed; favors no-fault auto insurance which he says is stymied by a lawyer-dominated Legislature; says he is running because present representatives lack leadership and are immobilized by special interests.

F. Carlos Navejas, Democrat, chemical engineering student; no material submitted.

George S. Curry, Republican, 37, owner of Stewart Trucking Inc. of Los Angeles, said he entered politics after his 18-year-old daughter expressed her feeling that every politician was a crook. Has accented free enterprise themes and a 'businesslike directness" in solving governmental problems.

Sumner M. Offill, Republican, 31, administrative assistant to State Sen. George Deukmejian, who has endorsed Offill for the seat. Richard "Dick" Marshall, American Independent party, pipefitter; no information supplied.

Demo rivals vow to unite against GOP

down in the middle of Roth's commercial and the screen went blank. Station officials said they were interviewing Roth so his complaint could be aired on a later news program.

Another candidate, Congressman Jermome Waldie, was interviewd on KNBC on an earlier news show where he acknowledged that his role on the House impeachment committee had cut into his ability to campaign. But Waldie told a newsman he personally had no complaint that he was excluded from the triple news conference with the leading candidates.

AS FOR Brown, Alioto and Moretti, each seemed confident of winning Tuesday although Brown is the front runner by more than 2 to 1 in the final independent California Poll before the balloting.

Appearing in the final third of the show, Brown's criticism of alleged corruption in Sacramento contrasted with Moretti's contention that California has had relatively scandal-free government.

He cited legislation passed since he became speaker in 1971 that made the legislative process more public and gave California what he contended is the nation's toughest campaign contribution disclosure law.

JOSEPH ALIOTO

Alioto, sticking with his opposition to Prop. 9, said the measure would create a kind of "Spanish inquisition" that would not achieve its intended goal of scandal-free politics.

In contending he is best qualified to be governor, through experience as San Francisco's chief executive and a former antitrust lawyer, Alioto said, "They have been in the public trough." That was an apparent reference to Moretti and Brown.

Don Phillips	13.1
Gil Stevens	4.7
John Philip Sousa IV	4.4

It should be pointed out that the names of Wallace Edgerton, Virginia Waters, Antonio Gigliotti, Wallace Rodecker, Robert Sassone and Henry Schultz were not shown to voters in the Democratic sample. The name of Bill Semeraro was omitted from the Republican sample.

Since the nomination in each case will be determined by a plurality the technique of asking only about "front runners" isn't likely to affect the ability of the poll to identify the leaders in each race; however percentage of vote totals could show some upward bias.

For comparison to the above results, the earlier poll showed Hannaford with 15.2, Murray 7.2, Housley 2.1 and Rubley 1.7. So even though Hannaford improved his percentage somewhat so did all of the others and Hannaford holds now less than a two-to-one margin over his closest competitor.

On the GOP side the earlier figures were Bond 30.1, Phillips 8.6, Sousa 2.4, Semeraro and Stevens each .6. On a percentage basis Phillips has improved his position in relation to Bond although Bond still holds just over one-third of the voters.

In the 58th Assembly District the races closed up somewhat more.

New results:

58th Assembly

Democrats

Don't know	50.5
Fred W. Chel	22.2
Clarence Gregory	19.0
Ernie Kell	8.3

(The name of F. Carlos Navejas was not in the sample.)

Republican

Don't know	52.1
James Gray	23.6
Sumner Offill	20.1
George Curry	4.2

(All candidates were included in this sample.)

Earlier the I,P-T poll showed don't know on the Democratic side 58.9, Chel 18.3, Gregory 9.8, Kell 6.9 and Navejas 5.8.

On the GOP side the earlier results were don't know 76.5, Gray 13.1, Curry 5.7 and Offill 4.5.

With such a high don't-know factor in all four of the above races it is risky to predict winners, particularly in the Assembly races. The fact that the current front runners were also ahead in the earlier polls certainly gives them an edge. Last-minute campaigning could affect any of the standings but whether it will or not can only be determined in the final poll when voters actually cast their ballots Tuesday.

1,000 Saigon troops storm trenches in bid for village

SAIGON (UPI) — A force of 1,000 attacking South Vietnamese soldiers, hurling grenades and suffering heavy casualties, stormed North Vietnamese trenches Saturday in a bitter battle to recapture a village 24 miles north of Saigon, military officers said.

"They are fighting from trench to trench," said one officer. "It's a hand-grenade war up there."

Military sources said the 1,000-man government offensive pushed across the Thi Tinh river on a floating bridge at dawn in the third attempt to recapture Communist-held An Dien village, seized in a tank assault May 16.

They were raked by Communist rocket, mortar and artillery fire before they reached the trenches on the other side of the 25-yard-wide river.

Early battlefield reports said at least 70 government soldiers were killed, wounded or missing in the first hours of the battle. There was no breakdown of casualties and Communist losses were unknown.

In Cambodia, rebel gunners hit Phnom Penh with a single 107mm rocket at dawn Saturday and killed one child in the fifth straight day of attacks.

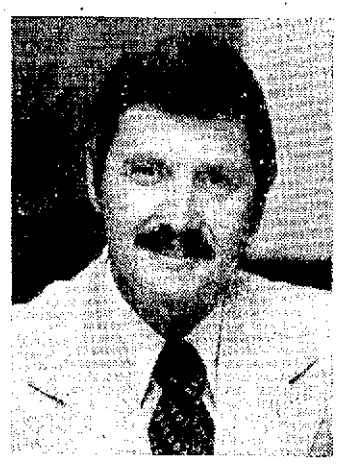

Sunny, but cooler than yesterday's 75

Forecasts call for morning clouds but a sunny afternoon today in Long Beach. The expected high of 70 will be slightly cooler than Saturday's high of 75.

The mountain areas will be mostly sunny with highs in the low 70s. Local water temperatures will be 61 degrees.

The Air Pollution Control District predicts little or no smog today.

On your item on U.S. Navy ships named after women, a cat-o-nine-tails to the Navy Research Branch in Washington who fed you that bilge. How did they miss the USS Isabel. She was named for Isabel Dodge of the automobile family and she was sold to the Navy by the Dodges for the traditional $1 while still under construction with the proviso that she retain the name of Isabel. She was commissioned in 1917 and operated on antisubmarine patrols during World War I, then sent to join the U.S. Asiatic Fleet. I went aboard the USS Isabel in Tsingtao, China, in 1940 and served aboard her until 1943. Even though the research branch has lost or misplaced the Isabel, she is remembered by me as the finest ship I ever served on and no crew was ever better respected. J.H., Long Beach.

5-year gubernatorial campaign nears end

Associated Press

One of the longest primary campaigns in California history ends Tuesday when Republicans and Democrats choose candidates to succeed Ronald Reagan as governor. Seven other states also hold primaries.

Campaigning by some California candidates began as long as five years ago. But a recent turning point was a perjury indictment by the Watergate grand jury that crippled the campaign of front-running Republican Lt. Gov. Ed Reinecke.

The latest polls show the strong favorites to be Democrat Edmund G. Brown Jr., 36-year-old secretary of state and son of the former governor, and Republican Houston I. Flournoy, 44, the state controller and a former college professor.

The other states holding primaries Tuesday include:

— Iowa: Two Republicans are contending for the right to face an unopposed Democrat for the Senate seat vacated by Democratic Sen. Harold Hughes, who quit the Senate to become a religous lay leader.

— South Dakota: A former prisoner of war, a businessman and a woman active in Republican politics are contending for the chance to oppose Sen. George McGovern, the 1972 Democratic presidential nominee. And Democratic Gov. Richard Kneip faces primary opposition from a former ally.

— New Mexico: Six Democrats and four Republicans are seeking nomination for governor.

— Mississippi: There are four contests for nomination in three of the state's congressional districts.

— Montana: The state's two congressmen, a Republican and a Democrat, are unopposed for nomination. But there are contests in each district for the right to oppose them.

— New Jersey: There are 69 candidates running in the 15 congressional districts, a development Democrats believe results from the fact that Watergate makes no Republican safe.

— Alabama: Two candidates are running for the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor after failing to get a majority in the first primary.

In California, political reform is a major issue, but the leading gubernatorial candidates still spent more than $1 million each seeking nominations in President Nixon's home state.

Brown and Flournoy were so confident of winning, they already had agreed to a series of debates.

Brown's chief challengers among 18 Democrats are State Assembly Speaker Bob Moretti, 37, and Joseph L. Alioto, the flamboyant mayor of San Francisco whose wife, Angelina, went underground for 18 days to protest her husband's immersion in politics and lack of attention to her.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., faced only token opposition for renomination to a second term. Cranston is an early favorite to win re-election over any of the five lesser-known GOP challengers.

The campaign for governor started unofficially in 1969, when Democratic Rep. Jerome Waldie and Reinecke said they would run.

Waldie's candidacy never caught fire and he was hampered during the critical months of the campaign by what he considered a more important commitment: his role on the House Judiciary Committee in its study of the possible impeachment of President Nixon.

Less than a year ago, Reinecke, 50, was the undisputed front-runner in the Republican primary and the polls showed Flournoy running last in a field of six prospective candidates.

5-year campaign ends Tuesday

Then came Reinecke's testimony to the Senate Judiciary Commitee about his role in the ITT case and his subsequent indictment. He was charged with lying to the committee about when he first told former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell about a $400,000 offer from the Sheraton Corp. to underwrite the 1972 Republican National Convention in San Diego.

The indictment said Reinecke lied when he told the committee under oath that he did not tell Mitchell of the offer until after favorable settlement of an antitrust case against International Telephone & Telegraph Corp., parent firm of Sheraton.

Reinecke was indicted on April 3, pleaded "absolutely not guilty" and battled unsuccessfully to have his trial held before the primary.

Flournoy ran a low-key campaign. He claimed he was the only Republican who could attract the necessary Democratic votes to win.

The major issue among Democrats was their position on Prop. 9, a sweeping political-reform measure. Brown's support for the measure led to allegations of hypocrisy from his opponents as his campaign spending soared to the million-dollar mark. Moretti backed the measure with reservations; Alioto adamantly opposed it.

In one of the contests for the state's 43 U.S. House seats, maverick Republican Rep. Paul N. McCloskey faced one of his stiffest renomination challenges since he defeated Shirley Temple Black to win his seat in 1969. Conservative Gordon Knapp waged a vigorous and well-financed door-to-door campaign against McCloskey in the GOP primary in a suburban area south of San Francisco.

And former Assembly Speaker Jess Unruh sought a political comeback as one of four Democratic candidates for state treasurer.

Here is the rundown on the other primaries:

In Iowa, Democratic Rep. John Culver is unopposed for the Democratic nomination to succeed Hughes. In the Republican primary, State Sen. George Milligan faces State Rep. David Stanley, defeated six years ago by Hughes.

In South Dakota, retired Air Force Col. Leo K. Thorsness, who spent six years in a North Vietnamese prison camp, is considered the leader in the race to oppose McGovern. His opponents are Al Schock, a Sioux Falls businessman, and Barbara Bates Gunderson, a former member of the U.S. Civil Service Commission. Gov. Kneip, a Democrat, is opposed in his bid for a third term by Lt. Gov. William Dougherty, his running mate the past two campaigns.

In New Mexico, there are 10 candidates seeking to replace Gov. Bruce King. The six Democrats include three state legislators, two former state legislators and a former state attorney general. Two former state senators, Joseph R. Skeen and John P. Easham, are the two Republican front-runners.

In Mississippi, Democratic Rep. David Bowen is favored over Harry G. Robinson, mayor of Houston, in the 2nd District. In the 4th, Republican incumbent Thad Cochran is opposed by Robert Coleman, a brother-in-law of former civil rights activist James Meredith. The winner will face one of five Democrats also running Tuesday. In the 5th District, an insurance man and a teacher are running in the Democatic primary to oppose Republican Rep. Trent Lott.

In Montana, former congressman Arnold Olsen is attempting to beat two challengers in one Democratic congessional primary. If he wins, he'll face Republican Dick Shoup, who defeated him in 1970 and 1972. In the other district, a former Democrat and an advertising salesman compete for the right to oppose Democratic incumbent John Melcher.

In New Jersey, Democrats think Watergate makes it possible to take all seven districts held by Republicans. Only one member of the 15-member delegation is retiring, Peter H.B. Frelinghuysen, and two liberal Republicans — Assembly Minority Leader Thomas H. Kean and Millicent Fenwick, former director of the State Division of Consumer Affairs — are competing for the GOP nomination to succeed him.

In Alabama, Lt. Gov. Jere Beasley, the first lieutenant governor allowed to succeed himself, faces industrialist Charles Woods, who led the field in the first five-man primary.

39 running for seats on party committees

By BUCK LANIER
Staff Writer

There are 39 running and 28 will be elected or re-elected. Their names are not on posters, newspaper and TV radio ads or plunking into your mailbox with pleas for support in Tuesday's primary.

They are the Democratic and Republican 57th (old 44th) and 58th (old 39th) District Central Committee members from Long Beach, Lakewood and Carson. Each party elects seven per district every two years.

These people receive no pay but, under California law, are charged with precinct leadership, candidate research and development, registration vote drives, fund raising and overall party guidance between elections.

A candidate list follows and, when the Independent, Press-Telegram was able to contact them, a statement follows the name, age (when available), address, occupation and status.

57th DISTRICT, Democratic:

Ann M. L Febvre, 65, of 4373 Gundry Ave., Long Beach retired McDonnell Douglas, six-year incumbent. "Since I can remember I have been involved in politics through my work in the labor movement. I believe in working for the things you believe."

John Daniel Calas Sr., 61, of 21720 S. Avalon Blvd., Carson, business investment, four-year incumbent. "I've been with the party all my life.. I believe in helping the candidates and, when asked about running, I did. You have to be committed."

Cleo E. Pettis, 63, of 2145 Delta Ave., Long Beach, retired Long Beach city employe, four-year incumbent. "I believe in getting people educated about politics, getting involved and getting them registered. It is easier to do from a committee post."

Mary Tobias, 41, of 1117 E. 16th St., Long Beach, Long Beach City College. "I was a precinct inspector for 13 years and involved there. I want to become more involved, so I decided to seek a committee position."

Ronald A. Morgan, 33, of 1527 W. 23rd St., Long Beach, administrator of United Church Care Center in Torrance. "I feel that I can serve the party by getting in with the action and helping to build the future. We're in trouble if we default to the PR firms packaging candidates."

James S. Hayes, 21, of 4408 Falcon Ave., Long Beach, junior at LBSU. "I'm ready to step up and do some work for the party and build for 1976. I feel I can make a direct contribution."

Republicans just 'hanging on'

GOP Calif. chances 'slim'

By CHRISTOPHER LYDON
New York Times Service

In California, as in many states, it is not necessary to wait for the election results to know that it is a bad year for Republicans.

Many big names in the party here—starting with Gov. Reagan and former Lt. Gov. Robert H. Finch—have chosen not to run at all in 1974.

Established party figures who are running this year—like Atty. Gen. Evelle Younger and most of the Republican state legislators—are playing it safe, trying only to hold what they have rather than to take the next step—toward statewide office, for the legislators, and for Younger, toward the governor's office.

For four seats in the U.S. House of Representatives there will be no Republican candidates on the ballot in November. In many other congressional races the Republican entries are only tokens. Democrats, holding 23 of California's 43 seats in the House, foresee gains of from two to five seats; not one of the 20 Democratic incumbents running for re-election to the House feels seriously pressed by a Republican challenger.

It is a year, in short, in which ambitious Republicans sought not to run; a year in which risk-taking on the chance of new gains has disappeared, a year in which the Republican goal is to keep losses to a minimum. Examples of the Republican blight include the following:

Fred Marler, formerly the Republican leader in the state Senate, accepted a Reagan appointment to a trial court judgeship. "Most people," said an insider at the state Capitol in Sacramento, "viewed it as a step down—just to get out—because he'd have had to run as an identifiable Republican leader this fall."

Robert Monagan, a long-time Republican leader (and briefly speaker in the state Assembly, joined the Nixon administration in 1973 to polish himself up for a statewide candidacy. This year he was urged to challenge Rep. John J. McFall, a Democrat, in the San Joaquin Valley, or to run for state treasurer. But Monagan decided instead to stay on in Washington as an assistant secretary of transportation.

The Republican race to succeed Reagan, in which Houston Flournoy, the state controller, is now the heavy favorite, has been shaped largely by those who got out, and by the perjury indictment of one who stayed in, Lt. Gov. Ed Reinecke.

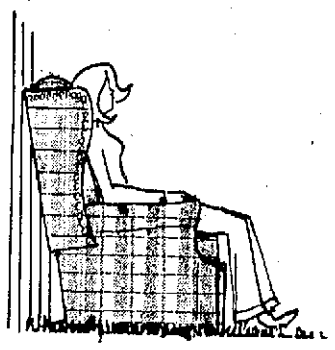

Robert Finch, former secretary of health, education and welfare, came home from the Nixon White House last year apparently running for governor, but he stepped aside as the Watergate scandals deepened.

In the Republican race to oppose Sen. Alan Cranston, a Democrat running for a second term, the most famous candidates are those who did not run. Among the survivors—notably state Sen. H. L. Richardson, a one-time John Birch Society organizer who called President Nixon too liberal for his support in 1972; and Dr. Earl W. Brian, the 32-year-old administrator of the Reagan health programs—none is given as good a chance for victory in November as Flournoy is in the governor's race.

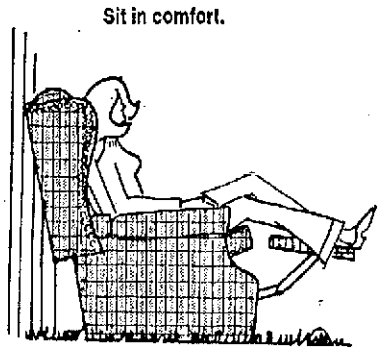

S.I. Hayakawa, the linguist, might have been the conservatives' favorite but did not register as a Republican in time to qualify for the primary. Mayor Pete Wilson of San Diego and Joseph Blatchford, the former Peace Corps director, both looked into the Senate race and found that money to promote a young candidate was unavailable.

Patience, tenacity triumphed

Kissinger's historic victory

By WILBUR G. LANDREY
UPI Foreign Editor

WASHINGTON — Henry Kissinger is a long distance runner.

His 33-day, 24,230-mile mission to the Middle East ended during the past week with an agreement between Israel and Syria for troop disengagement in the Golan Heights —an agreement that may, as he said, mark a turning point in the history of the Middle East.

Three times all this almost failed. Tha. it did not can be credited to the patience and tenacity of Kissinger and to the two leaders who worked with him to bring it about against an almost insurmountable barrier of suspicion and mistrust.

It was the last great act of a woman of 76, Prime Minister Golda Meir of Israel, before she abandons the leadership of her country this weekend. Hers was the major decision for Israel. When it was over, Kissinger kissed her.

It was also a major act of statesmanship for Hafez Assad, the 43-year-old air force general who as president of Syria broke all precedent to turn his radical Arab country symbolically towards peace with Israel.

In dealing with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat to negotiate the earlier Egyptian-Israeli military disengagement which opened the way, Kissinger was dealing with a leader who already had made up his mind to take the new direction in policy.

In dealing with Assad, Kissinger was dealing with a leader who was making up his mind only as events were happening. At each critical juncture, lesser Syrian officials repeated the familiar rhetoric of hostility and past injustice. Assad hesitated and then took the difficult and courageous decision for agreement. His was the final word.

The agreement inevitably raises the question of how Kissinger did what so many men have tried and failed to do before.

Kissinger has that tremendous grasp of detail that amazes. He has, in addition, a tireless patience to listen and explain that outlasts opposition and finally inspires trust.

More than that, the time was ripe, and Kissinger, the historian, knew it.

Tactically, Israel had won her fourth war with the Arabs last October. Strategically, she had lost peace had been made with Egypt. Syria, isolated behind the mountains of Lebanon, was bitter at the usurpation of land and rights she considered to be historically hers. But war had produced nothing.

It was Kissinger's task to teach both countries that however difficult was agreement, it was preferable to the alternative of continued war. It was the argument which finally prevailed.

ISRAEL had conquered the Golan Heights in the six-day war of 1967, establishing itself on the hilly uplands from which Syrian gunners had harassed the Israeli settlements in the fertile Huleh Valley below. When Syria attacked to try to regain the heights last October, Israel pushed a further salient to within artillery range of Damascus.

With what a senior American official later described as a combination of faith and ignorance, Kissinger began his mission to bring about the first step of military disengagement on April 28, approaching by way of Geneva, Algiers and Cairo.

In Geneva, Kissinger stopped to meet Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, trying to distance Soviet influence in the area. He found Gromyko cooperative, but not overly so. He found him, in fact, isolated except for the United States in a sea of world hostility and growing Arab power.

The first step toward

HENRY KISSINGER
The Time Was Ripe

arm in advance any jealous Soviet attempts to undermine his mission through Russian influence in Syria.

He met Gromyko twice before during the negotiations, and at the end, Kissinger's conclusion was that while the Russians probably had not helped, neither had they hindered.

IN ALGIERS, Kissinger sought the advice and help of President Hourari Boumediene, the leader of another hitherto radical Arab state with whom Kissinger was beginning to establish a rapport. And in Cairo, he turned to his main helper and Arab ally in Sadat.

It was Sadat who made the first disengagement agreement and turned Arab policy toward cooperation. But to proceed further, Sadat needed Syria on his side and not in opposition. Twice more during his talks, Kissinger checked back with Sadat and made a visit to the Egyptian leader his last stop before coming home.

Only then, did Kissinger begin his direct shuttles between Damascus and Jerusalem,

At the beginning, Kissinger was depressed by a sense of tragedy that remained with him until the final success was snatched from apparent failure. Each country acting out its own history, he feared, might not be able to bring itself to make the concessions it realized were necessary.

The first thing to establish was a cease-fire line in the Golan Heights. For Israel, it was politically impossible to retreat from the newly established settlements. For Syria, it was almost impossible to draw any line at all through Syrian territory, leaving Israel in control of most of the heights.

THE CRISIS on the line came Saturday, May 18, when Kissinger's mission was two weeks old. He was making his sixth shuttle to Damascus with his bags packed and a senior official said Kissinger expected to begin his trip home without agreement. Instead he got a Syrian concession that opened the way.

American officials believed that once they got agreement on a cease-fire line, that the other issues would tend to fall into place. On Kissinger's air force jet, the senior American official repeated that several times. The predictions were wrong.

Each issue, minor or not, was contested with a tenacity that made Kissinger describe the negotiations as his most difficult and complicated. By Thursday, May 23, his 10th shuttle they had piled up to the point that he was almost ready to give up again.

The man issue then was a thinning out of forces on both sides of the demarcation line. On that Thursday shuttle to Damascus, Kissinger got Syrian approval for a diplomatic device that has worked in the Egyptian negotiations with Israel and that Israel was willing to try again.

INSTEAD of trying to get the sides to agree directly with each other, the idea was to put forward an American compromise proposal that suited neither entirely but both could accept. That was the solution. It will not be published but its provisions are generally known.

But there was still no complete agreement.

By last Monday morning, Kissinger thought he had failed to get the final agreement. For five hours Sunday night, he talked to Assad, and at the end there were still tough problems on the width of the buffer zone between the forces and the issue of Palestine guerrilla infiltration into Israel.

While Kissinger talked with Assad, Undersecretary of State Joseph J. Sisco was talking with Syrian foreign minister Abdel Halim Khaddam. At 3 a.m. Monday, after their meetings, Kissinger and Sisco concluded it was impossible, the senior American official later recounted.

After a few hours sleep, Kissinger went to see Assad again, ready to recess the talks. They were drafting the statement of farewell when in the last five minutes, Assad remarked on the pity and pain that it should all end when agreement was so near.

It was Kissinger's 51st birthday. Lunch and a party were waiting in Jerusalem, but he suggested they try again, setting aside the haggling over each point in favor of drafting the whole agreement. That is what they did.

It took a dramatic, 13th shuttle on two hours notice to Damascus on Tuesday to settle the final points, but then it was up to the Israeli cabinet to decide. On Wednesday, it finally did.

The same deadlocks occurred in Israel, with Kissinger probing, explaining and pushing.

Everyone realized that the result would almost certainly be war. In the end, the alternative of peace prevailed.

Blacks holding own in Calif. politics

By CHARLES McFADDEN
Associated Press Writer

California's blacks aren't riding in the back of the political bus any more.

A black mayor, Tom Bradley, is running Los Angeles, third largest city in the nation. Wilson Riles, another black, has been state superintendent of public instruction for the past four years and is a favorite to win a second term.

Still more blacks could vault into positions of power as a result of this year's elections.

Los Angeles Democrat Mervyn Dymally, former chairman of the Democratic Caucus in the State Senate, is seeking his party's nomination for lieutenant governor. Assemblyman Willie Brown of San Francisco is one of two top contenders for the job of speaker of the California Assembly. Brown would be the first black speaker in California history if he gets the job.

Dymally says California's blacks are moving into a political Phase II.

"You don't find any straight black pitch any more," he says. "We're appealing to a broader base than we were when I first came up here in the early 1960s."

Charles Haskins, a black running for state treasurer, agrees that black candidates in 1974 are running on nuts-and-bolts issues.

"I don't think it's a question of being black any more," Haskins says. "The Negro voter is just as concerned about taxes, pollution and all the other issues as anyone else."

"And that's the way it should be," Haskins added in a recent interview.

Along with Dymally, Riles and Haskins, blacks are seeking other statewide jobs.

Wendell Handy, a Compton businessman, is running for the Republican nomination for secretary of state; James Johnson, a former assistant secretary of the Navy, is seeking the GOP nomination for the U.S. Senate.

Another black Republican, James Flournoy, is running for state controller to succeed outgoing controller Houston Flournoy. The two are not related.

Despite Flournoy, Handy and Johnson, it is the Democratic party on which most of California's blacks have concentrated their political efforts. All six black members of the California Assembly and the lone black in the State Senate—Dymally—are Democrats.

Dymally says he hasn't had a racial problem in his campaign up and down the state. In fact, he says one of his chief problems has been his success.

According to Dymally, some liberal Democrats in Los Angeles who would normally be attracted to his candidacy are staying away because, to them, Dymally has an image of a legislative "wheeler-dealer"—a maker of deals behind closed doors.

"It drives me up the wall," Dymally says.

In 1970, the latest year for which figures are available, California had 1.4 million blacks, says Nels Rasmussen, a population researcher in the State Department of Finance.

Open hearings

Waldie derides Nixon stance

By BOB HOUSER
Political Editor

Congressman Jerome Waldie, Democratic gubernatorial candidate and a leading advocate on the House Judiciary Committee of President Nixon's impeachment, scoffed Saturday at calls by Nixon attorney James D. St. Clair and presidential counselor Dean Burch for open hearings on the impeachment.

REP. JEROME WALDIE
Wants public hearings

Interviewed during a brief Long Beach stop, Waldie said that, if Burch thinks the secret hearings are "so incredible, there are 15 Republicans (judiciary members) he could deliver for an open committee vote."

Waldie said the cries for open hearings from Burch and St. Clair demonstrate that the (former Atty. Gen. John) Mitchell principle is still operating. "I refer to Micthell's statement on the philosophy of the administration when he said, 'Don't pay any attention to what we say; watch what we do.'"

A persistent advocate of open hearings, Waldie said 15 of 17 GOP members have voted for closed hearings. Waldie also disagreed with Chairman Peter Rodino's stated judgment that open hearings might prejudice cases of other Watergate defendants.

The congressman predicted that, as the committee nears its vote on impeachment, "e the hearings probably will be probably the last two weeks of June and the first week of July. I suspect the impeachment vote no later than the first week in July."

"Major discrepancies exist," he said, "between the tapes the President made public and the tapes provided the committee by Judge John Sirica — major discrepancies in language, in omissions and in punctuation."

Asked to appraise his gubernatorial chances in light of low readings in major polls, Waldie suggested a low-turnout scenario he said could deliver the election.

HE EXPECTS no more than a 50 per cent turnout, he said, as contrasted with Secretary of State Edmund G. Brown Jr.'s prediction of 62.5 per cent. "I've seen no improvement in the malaise and disaffection with politicians in the year and a half I've been campaigning," he said. "And none of us have managed to stir many people to much interest in the campaign.

"So, in a very low turnout, those issue-oriented voters, the activist, the liberal, will be the percentage that will carry."

Cases in point, he said, were his winning vote from the California Democratic Council; the 2,200 sample of Americans for Democratic Action in Southern California that gave him 46 per cent to Brown's 31 per cent; the Northern California ADA poll of three weeks ago that gave Waldie 52 per cent, William Roth, 28, and Brown in third place, and the UC Berkeley straw vote two weeks ago that went Waldie, 34 per cent, Moretti, 27, and Brown third.

"THERE IS nothing in the materials we've heard in the last four weeks that could not be made public. Not a a thing."

Unruh, Short blasted by foe

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Gray Davis, Democratic candidate for state treasurer, Saturday said his two major opponents, Jess Unruh and Alan Short, have no election platforms.

"With just 72 hours to go before the election," said Davis of his two Democratic rivals, "Jess Unruh and Alan Short are still in the dark about the treasurer's office.

"They don't know the issues, they don't know the office and they don't know what to do with themselves when they're not running for something," Davis said.

Chances fade on impeach hearings being made public

By JOHN BECKLER

WASHINGTON (AP)—It now looks as if the public will have scant opportunity—and perhaps none whatever—to witness any part of the impeachment proceedings of the House Judiciary Committee.

The prospect of live television coverage is especially diminished, both by the trend of the panel's thinking and the sheer crush of time. And it could be that the doors will be opened to no outsiders at all.

A number of votes and comments by committee members in recent days all went in the direction of keeping the inquiry closed, contrary to a plea from President Nixon's attorneys and previous assurances from panel leaders that the secrecy would soon be lifted.

THE PRIVACY to date was designed to expedite the initial presentation of evidence and also to protect some particularly sensitive items, such as the special report from the Watergate grand jury, heard in the early phase.

With two previous target dates having slipped by already, time is an even more urgent consideration—and Chairman Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., is determined to hold to a revised schedule that would wind up the investigative part of the proceedings in three more weeks.

Allowing another week for the examination of any witnesses and for the President's chief lawyer, James D. St. Clair, to present his arguments, the committee should be able to begin drawing up its recommendations by July 1.

AND, IF the committee concludes that it has a case against Nixon, it is not likely to linger at any great length before making its decision official.

Rep. John Seiberling, D-Ohio, expresses what is probably the prevailing sentiment among the majority Democrats: "As soon as we receive sufficient evidence to believe probable cause of impeachable offenses exists, it seems to me that is sufficient."

Most of the Democrats say the panel, like a grand jury, is charged only with determining whether there are reasonable grounds to believe an impeachable offense has been committed. The matter of proof would beleft to the Senate.

For that reason—and others—they generally oppose calling a long lineof witnesses, especially when most would merely duplicate testimony before the Senate Watergate committee and elsewhere. Witnesses, they say, should be summoned only to resolve serious conflicts in evidence.

The committee took another long stride toward meeting Rodino's timetable when it also refused, on a vote of 23 to 15, to open the hearings immediately, television included.

THE EVIDENCE is being presented in a manner that requires the members to sit silently while special counsel John Doar and his aides read statements and supporting evidence bearing on the various allegations.

While speedy and efficient, such a format provides little for cameras to focus upon and no chance for the individual congressmen to grab the limelight. The procedure undoubtedly would have been changed if the hearings were opened.

Like the witness stand, the subject of open hearings doubtlessly will arise again when the presentation of evidence is completed. But by then there will be ever heavier pressure to conclude the inquiry quickly.

Most House members, especially the Republicans, are anxious to get thevote behind them. And House and Senate leaders are growing increasingly alarmed at the progress of the regular legislative program.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., referred to what he considered attempts by Nixon to influence votes against impeachment by going to the Soviet Union and making special grants for congressmen.

"IT IS FUTILE for the President to try to play impeachment politics with foreign or domestic policy, or to try to use the powers of his office to tilt the verdict on impeachment in his favor," Kennedy said.

"Such efforts are an affront to the integrity of the Senate and the House because they carry the implication that the votes of senators and congressmen are for sale on the crucial issue of impeachment."

Congress, he declared, will not be influenced by the veto of any legislation, by any defense or federal grant, nor by "the philosophy of anyone appointed to high executive office."

Kennedy's remarks were in an address at Bridgewater State College in Massachusetts.

Sen. Walter F. Mondale, D-Minn., accused Nixon of using foreign espionage tactics for "subverting the law at home."

MONDALE, in an address in Los Angeles, said that "the danger of the Nixon presidency has been to transfer that style of secrecy, the use of national security and the psychology of negotiating with the enemy, away from the foreign policy arena and into the arena of domestic affairs ...

"This tendency continues today in the President's handling of the House impeachment inquiry and his dealings with the special prosecutor and the courts," said Mondale.

Nixon's aides have declined comment recently when asked whether the President would abide by the Supreme Court's decision to surrender subpoenaed tapes, saying such questions are hypothetical. When a similar dispute arose last year involving Jaworski's predecessor, Archibald Cox, Nixon then said he would comply with a "definitive ruling" of the Supreme Court—which, as it turned out, never got that case.

Hike in milk supports linked to Nixon gifts

Combined News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon's order raising federal milk price supports in 1971 may have cost the public more than $300 million, the staff of the Senate Watergate committee says.

The report also alleged that John N. Mitchell and John Connally tried to thwart a Justice Department antitrust investigation of a big milk cooperative while in Nixon's Cabinet.

It quoted the administration's chief agricultural economist as saying milk prices in grocery stores would have gone down had Nixon left federal price supports at the level set initially by the Agriculture Department.

"The President's decision was apparently worth anywhere from $300 million to $700 million in extra income to dairy farmers," the staff said in a draft report.

THE REPORT was written principally by Democratic staff members and based on evidence gathered by both sides. The Associated Press obtained a copy after it was circulated to committee members.

The report said the cost of Nixon's price order was paid by consumers in the form of higher prices for milk, cheese, butter and other dairy products, and also by taxpayers in the form of increased federal spending to keep farm income up.

It said officials of dairy farmer cooperatives had estimated that Nixon's price order was worth anywhere from $300 million to $700 million to dairy farmers. It said Don Paarlberg, chief economist of the Agriculture Department, termed the $300-million figure "credible."

The report concluded generally that Nixon's price increase was apparently directly linked to campaign donations from the dairy farmer lobby, which had promised to give the President $2 million for his re-election campaign.

Connally, the former Treasury secretary, met with milk co-op leaders in March 16 1972 and, according to committee testimony, called Mitchell and Sen. Robert J. Dole, the GOP national chairman, to tell them the antitrust suit would have "a very damaging effect...politically on the Republican Party."

According to Robert A. Lilly, former AMPI lobbyist, Connally and Mitchell discussed:

"Delaying contributions to the Republican Part by AMPI's political trust, slowing down the antitrust suits against AMPI, and, at a later date, reducing it to a 'wrist slap,' and promising to go slow on the IRS auit of AMPI."

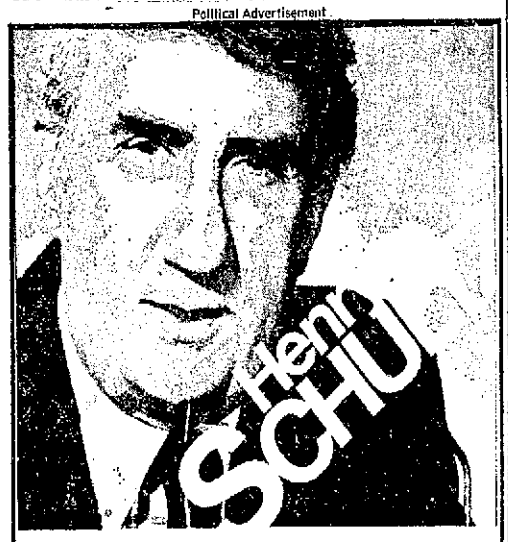

The report said that in the late 1960s, under the leadership of a few individuals, numerous dairy co-ops were merged into three large ones: AMPI, San Antonio, Texas, with 40,000 members; Dairymen Inc., Louisville, KY., 10,000 members; and Mid-America Dairymen Inc., Springfield, Mo., 25,000 members.

THE White House has denied that Nixon was influenced by the promise of money, and has also stated, "Economically, the President's decision to raise the support level proved to be sound and beneficial for the nation."

The staff said Paarlberg disputed the economic arguments of the White House, which it presented last January in a white paper defending Nixon's price increase.

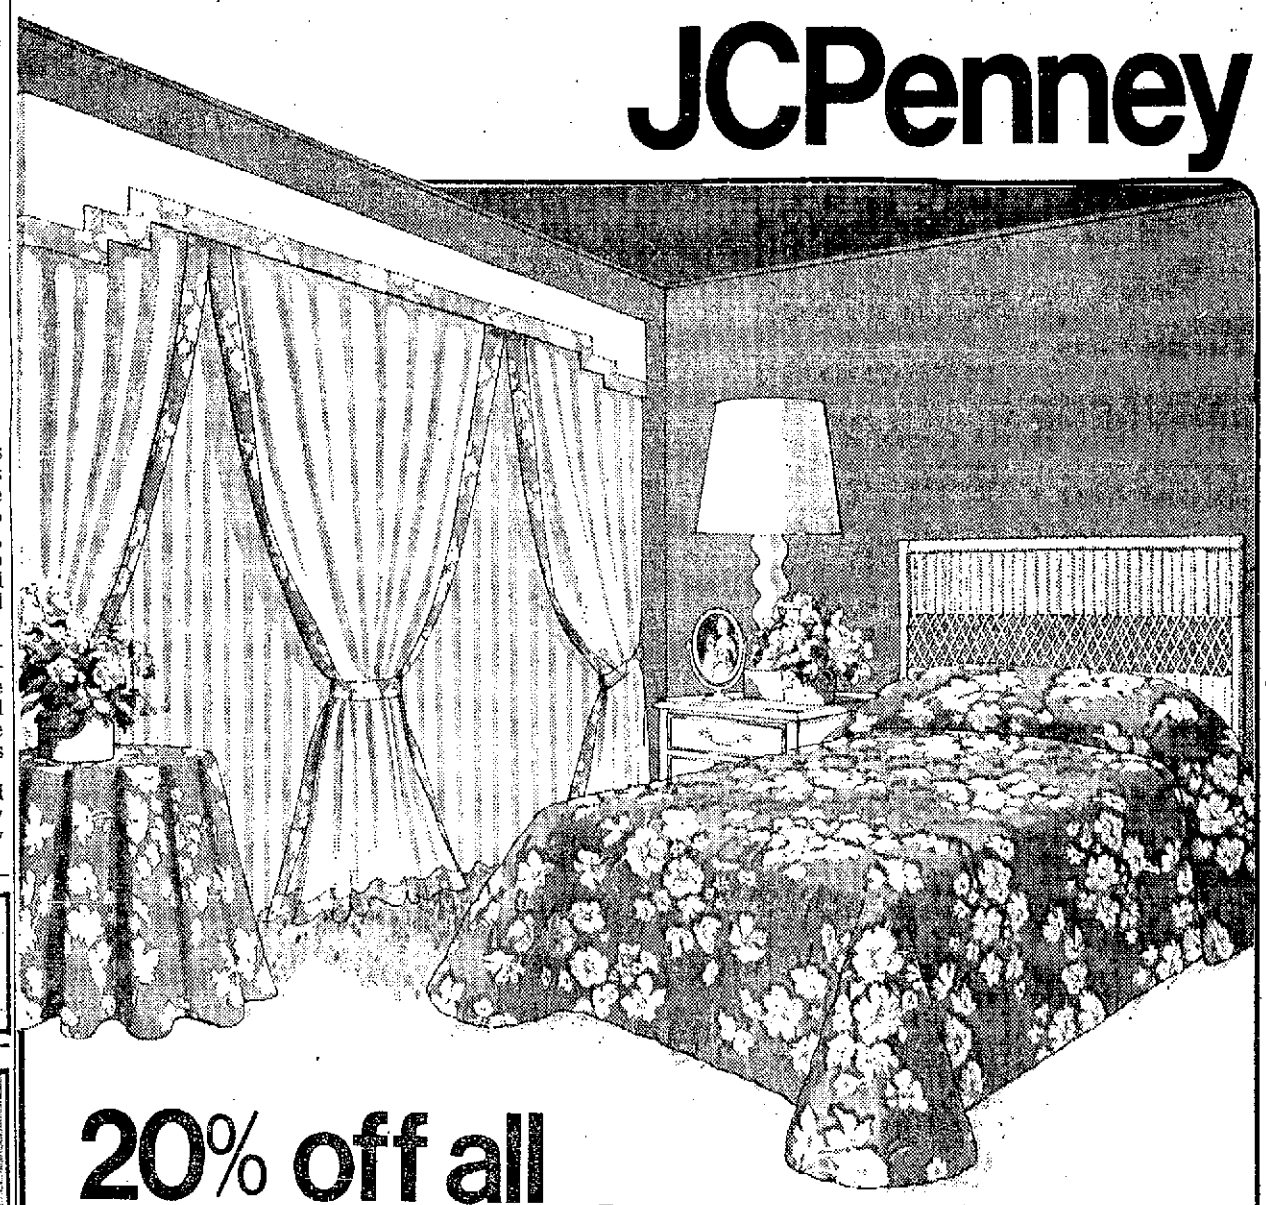

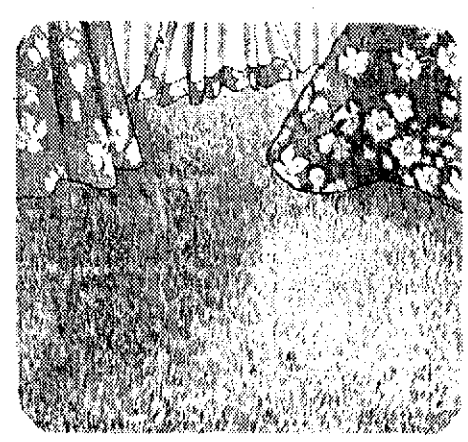

The White House said milk prices in grocery stores rose more slowly after Nixon's order.

Demos want speed as GOP stalls

Both parties press strange impeach policies

By GIL BAILEY
Our National Bureau

WASHINGTON — Democrats on the House Judiciary Committee have decided on a straight line course which they believe will lead to the bringing of impeachment charges against President Nixon by mid July.

The Republican strategy, fragmented by the first weeks of evidentiary hearings, is for delay if possible.

However, from four to eight Republican members of the committee may now be willing to vote for at least one impeachment charge — obstruction of justice — as a result of test votes held last week.

On one key vote, eight Republicans joined Democrats in rebuking the President for failing to comply with committee subpoenas and then warned the President he might be impeached for that failure.

Strangely enough, the Democratic and Republican strategies seem to work against each party's best interests.

Watergate, if not resolved by impeachment before the November election, appears to be the Democrats best issue but the Democrats are now pressing for fast action.

Fast action, on the other hand, might aid Republican congressional candidates but it is the Republicans who are proposing court tests which could delay action for months. In addition, the Republicans are proposing calling a string of witnesses, which could take weeks, and proposing that some witnesses be granted immunity, which under the law requires a 30-day delay until prosecutors say whether such immunity would destroy their cases.

Democrats beat down, with some Republican help, all of those moves last week.

"We hope to be wrapped up with the preliminary evidentiary hearings by June 18 or 19. We will call for a few vital witnesses and then consider charges in early July," said Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., outlining the Democratic strategy.

Already the impeachment charges are being drafted by the committee staff. The leading charge is expected to be one of obstruction of justice by the President involving the payment of money to E. Howard Hunt.

Other and much broader charges also will be proposed.

On the issue of the payment to Hunt, a number of Republicans have noted that there is evidence against the President.

The question of evidence is also the key in another Democratic-Republican fight in the committee over whether the hearings should be opened and whether some of the evidence should be made public.

Most Republicans called for closed hearings and for no release of the evidence, contradicting the stand taken by President Nixon's attorney, James St. Clair.

Republican congressmen cited "irrelevant testimony which might damage the President."

Rep. Charles Wiggins, R-Calif., said opening of the hearings might prejudice any possible Senate trial of the President.

"A lot of little people sat down and put together the case. It was a runaway grand jury," the source said.

The grand jury asked President Nixon to testify and he refused.

The open hearings were blocked and the decision on the release of any evidence has been delayed two weeks after Rep. Edwards protested on civil rights grounds.

"All the evidence concerning any impeachment charges will be released when the charges are brought," said Edwards. "Irrelevant evidence will be excluded."

If the House committee votes impeachment charges by mid-July, the House should act by mid-August, forcing a Senate trial just before the November election.

Delaying tactics in inquiry

Judiciary pressed to hear witnesses instead of tapes

By MIKE FEINSILBER

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Nixon's Republican supporters on the House Judiciary Committee are demanding that the panel call many witnesses before taking a vote on whether to recommend that Nixon be impeached.

Their demand conforms with the White House's apparent strategy of seeking to delay an impeachment vote in the House and a trial in the Senate as long as possible.

If the committee Republicans prevail and dozens of witnesses are summoned to testify, the panel's timetable, calling for a decision in early July on whether to recommend impeachment, w ll be thrown off for weeks, perhaps more than a month.

This, White House supporters hope, will give some of the anti-Nixon feeling in Congress and the country time to die down.

THE COMMITTEE has heard all the evidence its staff has gathered on the President's possible involvement in the Watergate cover-up and is scheduled to focus attention on the ITT and dairy industry contributions cases this week. The meetings, resuming Tuesday, will continue to be closed.

At a press conference last Monday, House Republican Leader John J. Rhodes of Arizona, a Nixon loyalist, signaled the new Republican tactic.

He said the committee was "mesmerized" with getting access to Nixon's tapes and urged members to get on to summoning witnesses for direct testimony.

Since then, Vice President Gerald R. Ford has called on the committee to turn to witnesses and away from the tapes. White House officials — a different one nearly every day — have said the same thing.

AT A public committee meeting Friday, Rep. David Dennis, R-Ind., a Nixon supporter, produced a list of 13 persons he wanted subpoenaed as witnesses to testify on the single question of whether Nixon authorized the payment of hush money to Watergate break-in conspirator E. Howard Hunt.

Dennis' list included many of the big names — John W. Dean III, John N. Mitchell, John D. Ehrlichman, and H. R. Haldeman among them.

Chairman Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., declared Dennis' motion out of order. He said under the committee rules the question of witnesses can only be raised after the panel has considered all the written evidence gathered by its staff since January. That process will take several more weeks.

Rodino said the question of calling witnesses can be discussed then.

Dennis told a reporter he suspects by that time the Democrats will be pressing for a vote without having heard any but a handful of witnesses on a few points in a speeded-up process.

"All kinds of rumors are around that the Democrats don't intend to call any witnesses and they haven't told us why," Rep. Harold V. Froehlich, R-Wis., said. "I think it's outrageous."

'Glorious Administration'

McLaughlin doubts Nixon impeachment

ORLANDO, Fla. (UPI) — The Rev. John McLaughlin, a White House speech writer, predicted Saturday that President Nixon will not be impeached and that history will someday record Watergate as a "footnote to a glorious administration."

In a talk to the Florida Republican Executive Committee, the Jesuit priest said the impeachment proceedings against Nixon were politically motivated, and suggested that the House judiciary committee is keeping its hearings closed to the public because there is no real evidence.

"IS THE committee covering up, perhaps, the fact it has generated a lot of noise, a lot of selected leaks, but no substance — even perhaps, that no legal case is there?" McLaughlin asked.

McLaughlin said the House Judiciary Committee, chaired by Rep. Peter Rodino, D-N.J., should open its chambers to the television cameras "so the American people can see for themselves where emperor Rodino is wearing any clothes."

GEORGE CURRY
The BELIEVABLE CANDIDATE
For State Assembly . . . Republican, 58th District

Believable because he wants to create a finer, New Age hemisphere for his and every family in Long Beach;—the working man and woman, the families on retirement pension, the youth who must never become disillusioned about government—who must forever believe in America!

Believably, George Curry is a man of compassion. Self-made, at 37 he is owner of Stewart Trucking Company near the Airport, employing 26 men and women. His broad spectrum of experience from union member to executive; from veteran in the Air Force to Fire Department specialist; from oil worker to ecologist make him soundly qualified to grasp the essentials of initiative and leadership. Because of this crucible of first-hand knowledgeability, he can immediately sift out pertinent issues as against the extraneous and trivia, the cause of legislative boondoggling stalemates.

YOU MIGHT DO WORSE but you cannot do better than believe in this believable man! Curry is completely dedicated to Service, of teaming together with other like-minded legislators in Sacramento, to act without endless talk.

YOUR VOTE for George Curry on Tuesday is actually a vote for yourself. His is Your Voice in Government, as opposed to politicians in politics. No candidate proposes to serve the interests of the voters better than this man whose background is a recital of vigorous idealistic conviction coupled with tenacious capacity to follow through!

These are the qualities YOU ALSO BELIEVE IN, are they not?

Black recruiter

After two years, body count's up

By TOM STUCKEY

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) —For three years, Navy Lt. Cmdr. Ken Johnson has been fighting an enemy that wears no uniform and carries no weapon.

His adversaries have been as elusive as the antiwhite feelings of inner city black youths and as concrete as the requirement committing Naval Academy graduates to five years of military service after they leave Annapolis.

Johnson, a 33-year-old black officer, was the academy's first minority recruiter, brought in to increase the small number of minority youngsters entering the Naval Academy. This month, he returns to shipboard assignment in Norfolk, Va., and his successor, Lt. Cmdr. George Gaines, also black, takes over.

THE BODY count for Johnson's three-year campaign indicates success—although he says it isn't an all-out victory—in the battle against more than 100 years of discrimination at the academy.

In 1970 when Johnson arrived at Annapolis, the incoming class of 1,300plebes included only 17 blacks and six other minority students.

His first year of recruiting pushed those figures to 45 blacks and 14 other minorities. The number of blacks in the plebe class jumped to 73 in 1972 and to 112 this year. The number of other minority students increased to 16 and then to 34 those two years.

"At the beginning I did a lot of traveling. I was on the road almost all the time," Johnson said. "I went to high schools, contacted the NAACP, the Urban League. I also got a lot of help from regular Navy recruiting officers. If they ran across a kid they thought would be good, they called me. As time passed, more people came to me, but I still like to get out and meet the ones who look like good prospects.

"THE BIG thrust is still eyeball to eyeball contact with a candidate. You need to be able to talk face to face with a kid to know if he sincerely wants to do the things he says he does."

Johnson says he's looking for aggressive, outgoing youths who know when to curb their aggressiveness.

A graduate of Iowa State University, Johnson came into the Navy through the Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC). He says the biggest hurdle in his recruiting has been the requirement that Naval Academy graduates serve five years of active duty in the Navy or Marine Corps.

The second major hurdle has been the Navy's lily-white image and a reaction to that image among black youths.

"I don't feel—and this is a personal opinion—that minority kids turn down the Navy because of an antimilitaristic attitude held by some white youngsters," Johnson says.

"TO THEM it's more of an antiwhite attitude, or antisystem. And when you say system to most minority youngsters, that means white."

Racial incidents aboard Navy ships in recent years also have created doubts. Johnson says he gets many questions about shipboard problems.

"I just tell them we have problems in the Navy just as we do in the rest of the country. The same people who are in the Navy causing problems were out there as civilians causing the same kinds of problems," he said.

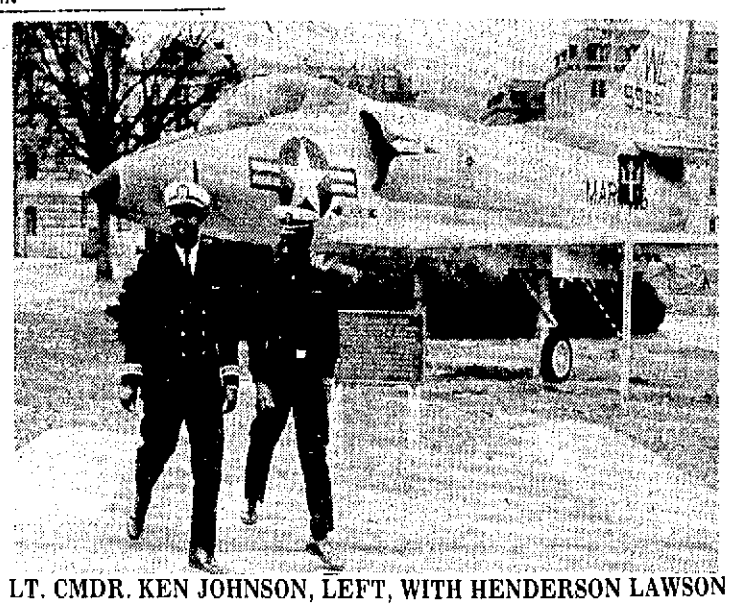

Johnson does not think the problems have hampered his recruiting. He says the kids who do the hardest questioning are the ones who probably were not interested in the academy to begin with.

"You know the Navy has the image of being lily white, and that has hurt. But the antiwhite feeling among youngsters I'm working with appears to have lessened that last year or two. Whether it really in fact has or whether we're just working harder, getting to more people, I don't know," he added.

A LOOK AT academy enrollment figures would tend to reinforce feelings about discrimination. Only two blacks were admitted to Annapolis prior to 1945, and both left after one year.

It was 1966 before the number of black plebes entering the academy reached double figures. And it was in 1969 that the total number of blacks admitted through 124 years added up to 112, the same number entering last summer as part of the class of 1977.

Both the Army and Air Force academies were in similar situations and both launched recruitment programs in response to pressure to increase minority enrollments.

LT. CMDR. KEN JOHNSON, LEFT, WITH HENDERSON LAWSON

At the Air Force Academy, the number of blacks in the incoming class increased from 29 in 1970 to 46 in 1973 and the total number of minority students from 53 to 93 in those years. Comparable figures for West Point show an increase from 40 to 80 in the number of blacks and from 64 to 137 for all minorities.

ATTRACTING blacks is only half the problem for the academies. Keeping them enrolled and happy is the next step.

"As far as being a black here at the Naval Academy, it's only what you make of it, really," says Kenneth Drum, a senior from Louisville, Ky.

"If you want to set yourself apart, you can. But you find whites really do accept you."

"Sometimes you look back and realize you have had conflicts, but there haven't been any major ones with white classmates," the wiry football player added. He has had white roommates throughout his academy career.

Dennis Tate, a slender, serious senior from St. Louis, Mo., recalls feeling like something of an oddity his plebe year when there were 40 blacks in the 2,000-man brigade of midshipmen. But he has seen changes.

"BLACKS ARE more taken for granted now. You're just another midshipman," he says.

John Mariner, a sophomore from Norfolk, Va., agrees that there is "nooutward racial discrimination or anything like that."

"But I get this feeling that a lot of blacks aren't really as satisfied as a lot of whites. I just don't feel that a lot of blacks really identify with the Navy," he said.

Mariner thinks the biggest problem blacks must contend with is the rugged first-year indoctrination all middies undergo.

"You come here from high school where you were in the top part of the class and they just cut you down to nothing," he explains. "A lot of blacks think they have their pride to deal with. They just can't really accept that they have to be so subservient."

THE ONE area where black midshipmen agree there is a problem is socially.

While social opportunities are limited for all middies, they think it is worse for blacks.

"You find yourself many a Saturday night in your room by yourself," Drum says.

He and Tate agree the situation has improved since the social director began bringing more black girls from Washington and Baltimore for academy dances.

Government employes: are they the elite among workers?

The Associated Press

Help Wanted — Male-Female

Outstanding employer pays top wages to millions of blue and white collar workers. Exceptional job security, life insurance, major medical, best pensions in the country, constant advancement, guaranteed annual raise — regardless of performance — plus additional raises for merit and seniority. Swamped with applicants. Only most qualified should apply.

This could be a recruiting ad for federal employment. But its publication would add to the criticism now aimed at the United States government for spending $60 billion annually on wages and benefits.

The federal government is not only the nation's largest employer, but — critics say — generous to a fault, at the taxpayer's expense. The questions are:

—Can the taxpayer afford the constantly rising bill for government salaries and benefits. It's doubled in a decade, says the nonprofit Tax Institute, Inc., a research organization.

—Are government employes overpaid and overpensioned? Average federal pay is $9,900 annually for blue collar employes and $13,200 for white collar workers; in each case, above the national average. Pensions, after 40 years of service, are 80 per cent of the last three years' average pay. That's four or five times better than Social Security, but payroll deductions are nearly the same.

The Nixon administration's guideline for annual wage increases has been 5.5 per cent. But all federal salaries rose 12.8 per cent in 1973, a U.S. Chamber of Commerce survey reported. Big salary increases for the armed forces and for postal workers drove up the percentage and might do so again.

A new postal workers contract, signed last summer, increases wages 17 to 20 per cent over two years. A letter carrier who started in 1962 at $4,565 now earns $11,773 plus a $146 cost of living payment this year.

THE END of the draft last year and the new dependence on a volunteer Army has had a dramatic impact on an Army private's pay. He earned $78 a month a decade ago, $134 in 1971, $288 in 1972 and $326 today. And Congress decided to pay $3,000 bonuses to recruits jo ning ary of $19,246 annually, a jump of more than 400 per cent.

the infantry or artillery. Low-ranking officers also have done well. A second lieutenant has jumped from $399 to $791 monthly in a decade, and a major from $834 to $1,524 since 1964.

Another 12.8 per cent salary increase this year would add $6.5 billion to the payroll for the nation's five million federal employes. Two-thirds are in the postal service and military.

Add state, county, town and city employes and there are more than 14 million Americans earning government salaries — from the President to City Hall janitors in small towns. They earn $150 billion in pay and benefits, or $700 for every man, woman and child in the nation. They fill one of every five U.S. jobs.

THE $150 BILLION is 15 times higher than what experts in the 60's said would be needed to restore dying American cities. Salaries and benefits for federal employes alone use up 50 per cent of all U.S. income taxes collected and nearly a quarter of the government's operating budget, which is $269 billion this fiscal year. The money is almost enough to purchase an economy car for every American family each year.

One of the inflationary factors, on the federal level, is the Civil Service system of pay increases — sometimes referred to as "a raise within an escalator within an elevator." Secretary Susan W. went to work for the federal government in 1962 at $4,656. Since then, she's earned the normal five grade promotions, each with a pay increase. She also received raises for longevity and merit — she's entitled to 10 over 18 years — and more raises to keep base pay even with that paid to secretaries in private industry. The result today: A salary of $19,246 annually, a jump of more than 400 per cent.

State, county and city employes don't do as well. Surveys show they earn generally 30 per cent less than their federal counterparts.

PENSIONS are another matter.

Many state and local governments have adopted the federal system of paying a retired employe 70 to 80 per cent of his average wage the last years on the job. As a result, pensions are a major reason for the spiraling taxpayer burden.

Federal pension payments have risen from $1.3 billion in 1964 to $4.6 billion last year.

Similar total figures do not exist for state and city pensions, except for the statistic that state and city pension funds on reserve have grown in three years from $47 billion to $68.9 billion. Taxpayer groups have charged that in some states, 50 per cent of the budget might eventually have to be spent on pensions; partly because employe contributions decline while pensions themselves rise.

NEW YORK CITY, with one of the most generous government pension plans, now devotes 11 cents of every tax dollar to pension payments. They have tripled in the past decade to nearly $1 billion annually. Uniformed firemen, policemen and sanitation men can retire after 30 years with annual pensions equal to 75 per cent of their last year's salary, including overtime. Some retired New York City garbagemen are getting $13,000 a year.

Under the federal system, the government matches employe contributions (they were $2.1 billion last year) and adds whatever "sweeteners" Congress might vote. A federal white collar worker who earned the average $13,200 during his last three years, retires today with a $10,560 annual pension plus a cost of living escalator. His contribution during his working years, however, was only 1.5 per cent more than his privately employed counterpart paid for Social Security. And the counterpart's Social Security is only $3,648 annually, if he earned the minimum $13,200 required for full benefits at age 65.

Federal employes aren't eligible for Social Security. For state, county and city workers, Social Security is optional.

Besides Social Security, some 25 million to 28 million Americans outside government are covered by private pension plans. These average $1,604 annually upon retirement, and the employe has contributed about half the cost during his working years.

ASIDE FROM cost, the U.S. government is confronting the charge that its pay and pension policies are creating a bureaucracy able to afford a better life than the taxpayers who support it. Martin Lefkowitz of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's Washington staff says that in the competition for good employes, federal wages drive up private wages, fueling inflation.

The Civil Service Commission's categorical answer is "no;" that most salaries are competitive with pay in pay in private industry; that white collar salaries are based on an annual survey of wages in the private sector. Spokesmen say that all federal wages might have risen 12.8 per cent last year, but that was only because of big increases in military and postal pay. White collar salaries otherwise went up within the 5.5 per cent Nixon guideline, the Civil Service spokesmen say.

Nevertheless, Raymond Jacobson, a pay expert in the Civil Service Commission, says some federal workers have benefited in recent years from a statistical error in determining salaries. He said the error will cost the government $1 billion in unwarranted salaries this year.

AT THE TOP of the federal pay structure is the 2,500-man executive staff. Its wages range from $60,000 for Cabinet officers and Supreme Court justices to $36,000 for heads of minor agencies. In the middle is the $42,500 paid to congressmen and senior judges, $40,000 for undersecretaries and lower-level federal judges, and $38,000 for assistant secretaries. The executive staff pay is revised by the President, usually every four years, and goes into effect unless Congress vetoes, as it did this year; apparently out of fear of taxpayer wrath in November.

The next level is the most controversial. It covers 1.3 million white collar workers. The maximum for top managers, including 150 admirals and generals, is $36,000. The maximum can't by law go higher because it would invade the executive staff pay schedule, which starts at $36,000. The minimum is $5,017 for the lowest clerk in his first year.

The third bracket covers 489,000 blue collar workers. By law, they are to be paid the same wages as their privately employed counterparts in the same city. In fact, their average pay of $9,900 annually is well above the $8,440 average for all blue and white collar workers in the private sector.

Pay for most of the military and the 672,000 postal workers is handled separately.

JACOBSON and others on the Civil Service Commission say the $36,000 limit for white collar workers deprives the government of top management talent. To which Andy Norgard of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce says: "To those who lament their federal pay and contend they can get much more outside federal service, I say, 'Go ahead, if you can.' Very few do."

The Department of Commerce, in a national survey, found that federal white collar salaries as a whole rank sixth nationally, behind stockbrokers, airlines, motor transportation and warehousing, auto making and oil.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics annually surveys 75 civilian jobs to determine base pay scale adjustments for all federal white collar workers. Gen. Elmer B. Staats of the General Accounting Office says the survey is too limited to properly evaluate the broad range of government white collar jobs.

Civil Service Commission experts say that, generally speaking, lower echelon white collar jobs pay better than their counterparts outside government, but top federal salaries are lower than the pay for similar work in private industry. Senior clerks, for example, are lumped in a GS5 category ($8,055 to $10,467) with college graduates and that tends to push up clerical salaries beyond pay in the private sector, Staats said.

Whatever the pros and cons, government employment apparently is attractive. More than 150,000 people applied recently for 10,000 to 12,000 GS5 jobs and half the applicants qualified. Waiting lists exist across the country for government jobs, officials say.

Terrorists still plague Mexico

By TIMOTHY BERRY

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — Despite a massive crackdown since the kidnaping more than a year ago of U.S. Consul Gen. Terrance Leonhardy in Guadalajara, Mexican terrorists are still a headache for the government of President Luis Echeverria.

During the past 12 months, extremists have surfaced in widely scattered areas of Mexico in gunbattles, abductions, robberies and killings. One group, the "Sept. 23 Communist League," stands head and shoulders above the rest.

Since it pulled off the Leonhardy kidnaping May 4, 1973, — forcing the government to ship 30 so-called political prisoners to Cuba and collecting $80,000 in ransom from Leonhardy's wife — the league has spread its known activities to eight other cities.

MEXICAN authorities have moved quickly against them and other extremist groups whenever they struck. In some instances, police even smashed terrorist plots before they could be carried out.

One of these involved a plan to kidnap Nobel Peace Prize winner Norman Borlaug, an agricultural scientist, in northern Sonora State last March. Another abduction scheme was directed against U.S. Consul Gen. Goodwin Shapiro in Ciudad Juarez — across the border from El Paso — in April.

Both plots were thwarted with the arrest of league members, police said.

In sharp contrast with known guerrilla kidnaps is the strange case of U.S. Vice Consul John Patterson, missing from his office in Hermosillo, 150 miles south of the Arizona border, since March 22.

Although Patterson, 31, and on his first diplomatic assignment, had first been presumed in guerrilla hands, both Mexican and U.S. officials now regard the case as a mystery.

THERE HAS BEEN no word from him since a still undisclosed ransom note in his own handwriting was found at the consulate three hours after his disappearance.

Leonhardy's abduction in Guadalajara became a watermark in Mexico because it was the beginning of the league's string of subversive violence and the last time the Echeverria government bowed to demands for release of jailed extremists.

The sharp upturn in league activity ranging from kidnaping to murder was spread over nine areas: Guadalajara, Mexico City, Acapulco, Monterrey, Durango, Oaxaca, Sonora, Ciudad Juarez and Culiacan.

DEMOCRAT
34 CONGRESSIONAL
HERE'S HOW HE'S DIFFERENT

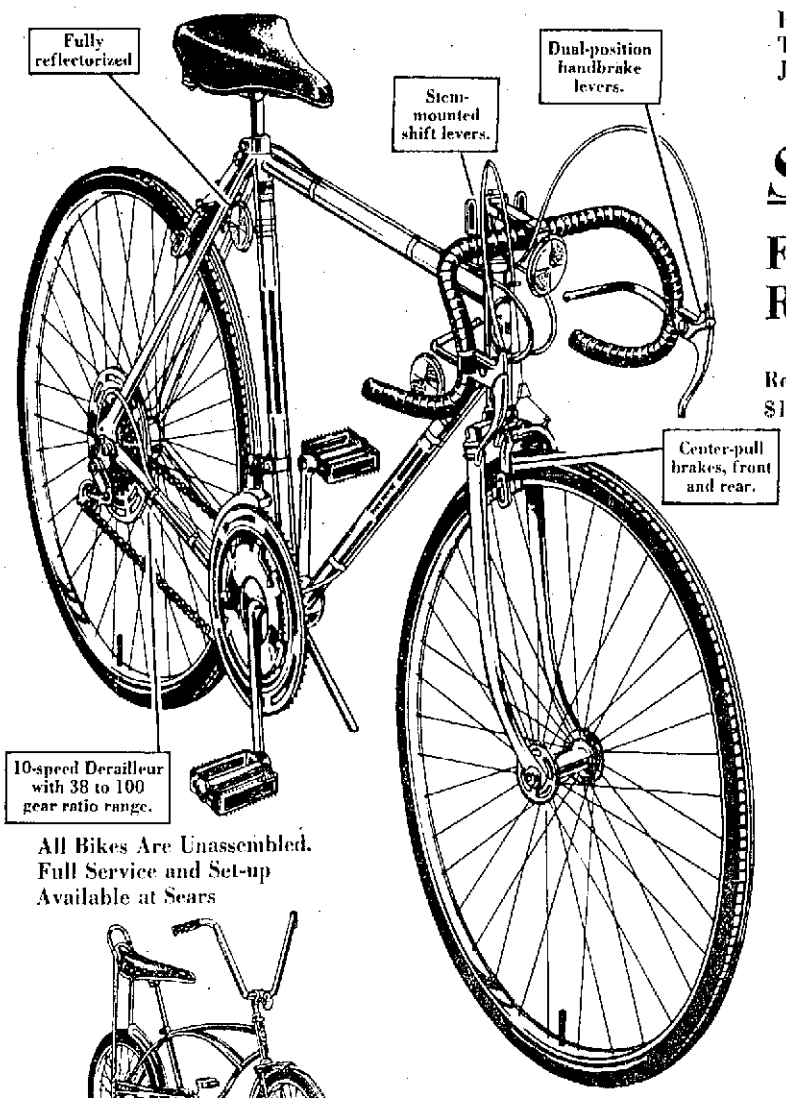

There are eleven Democratic candidates for Congress. Sassone definitely differs from each of the others in each of these ways.

1. At the beginning of the campaign, Sassone offered to limit his spending to any amount agreed to by the other candidates and also offered to limit his maximum donation to any sum agreed to by the other candidates. No other candidate was willing to accept either limitation. (To verify this, see Long Beach Press-Telegram, 3-10-74, page B-7).
2. Sassone was listed in Who's Who in the West because of his expertise in energy, inflation and food.
3. While all the candidates complain about inflation, Sassone has initiated a law suit which may cut your prices by 3-6%.
4. Sassone has lived abroad in Europe, Africa and Asia.
5. Sassone has worked for a human life amendment prior to this campaign.
6. Sassone has significant grassroot support — about 2,000 volunteers. None are paid.
7. Sassone does more than complain about corrupt election. Sassone is running a campaign which will leave him committed only to the public not the bosses.

We think Sassone is the only candidate who:

1. Is not accepting any donations from lobbyists.
2. Is voluntarily limiting his maximum donation to less than $100.
3. Disclosed his financial statement and income tax returns to the press at the beginning of the campaign.
4. Is limiting his total spending for the campaign to the limit for certain primaries described by Proposition 9.

Despite frustration

Eskimo whalers keep it 'cool'

New York Times Service

POINT HOPE — With warm affection, Sen. James L. Buckley bade farewell to the Eskimo whaling crew with whom he had spent a week living on the ice of the Chukchi Sea above the Arctic Circle.

"You have all been wonderful," said the 51-year-old senator from New York, who had been invited to this village by an old Eskimo friend. Port Hope is an outpost of 370 whose subsistence and culture are dependent upon the bowhead whale in much the same way as the survival of the plains Indian was dependent on the bison.

"You folks bring us luck," beamed Claudia Tuzroyluk, the wife of the captain of the whaling crew. For more than a month the 15 men, women and children of the crew had camped out while hunting the bowhead. But they had not killed a whale until two days after Buckley arrived with Laura Bergt, an Alaskan native leader from Fairbanks.

The campsite was seven miles from the remote village along a trail that wound through compacted ice formations, some standing 60 feet high. In some places there were seal holes and treacherous pools covered only by a tissue-thin crust. The trip out on sleds pulled by snow machines was a roller-coaster ride in face-biting wind.

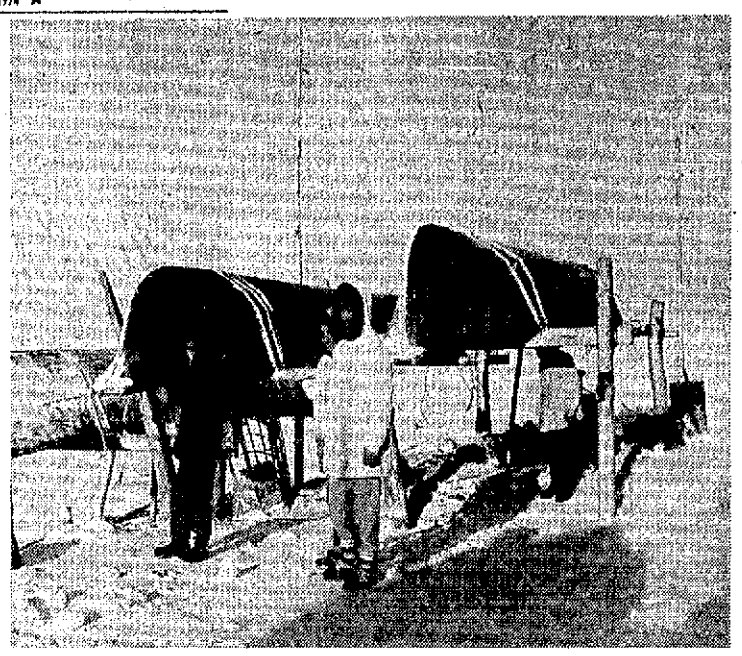

AFTER A long wait on an icy point a mile from the camp, the crew's captain, Seymour Tuzroyluk, spotted the arched hump of a bowhead whale surfacing 150 yards from shore. His men swiftly sped their sealskin boat into the water and within two minutes Tuzroyluk had killed the whale by throwing two detonating harpoons into its back.

However, as the boatmen strained to drag their catch ashore, the harpoons worked themselves free and the bowhead fell to the bottom. All day the crew grappled for it in 25 fathoms of water. Finally they had to give up because the pack ice— a vast expanse of floating crags that stretched to the horizon— moved in to cover the open water and the whale.

It appeared that the animal, whose meat would have fed this entire village for a year, was lost.

But then at 3 o'clock on Sunday (May 26) morning, Mrs. Tuzroyluk burst into the tent where the senator was sleeping with four of the younger crew members.

"They got whale," she called, ringing a bell to alert the members of the crew camped out over 20 miles. Quickly the tent emptied and everyone trotted to the edge of the ice.

ESKIMO WHALE HUNTERS AND THEIR SEALSKIN BOATS
—AP Wirephoto

A SHIFT of the wind had pushed the ice mass that had covered the whale to the west and, even though the shoreline had been radically altered, the men knew where to look. Hooks that they had fashioned the day before from iron rods caught the flukes and the massive body of the whale, buoyed by gases formed by putrefaction, came easily to the surface, floating belly up.

The steaks would no longer be fit for human consumption; they would go to feed the dogs. But the muktuk— the skin and outer layer of blubber that is the staple of the Eskimo diet— was fine. There would be some 20 tons of it.

For the next 30 hours fatigued men from some eight whaling camps butchered the whale and placed 800-pound loads of meat on sleds drawn by ice machines. The meat was then stored in a natural underground freezer dug out of the permafrost.

Through much of this time Sen. Buckley watched and marveled at the energy, ingenuity and cooperation of the men.

American dream: Is more still better?"

BUCKLEY HAS long been interested in the Arctic and has made several expeditions to northern Canada and to Greenland, although this trip marked the first time he had lived with Eskimos. He made the trip because of this interest and because he had been invited to view the hunt by the Tundra Times, a weekly that circulates in Eskimo villages.

It was not a publicity-seeking trip. "This has been an enormously rewarding experience for me and not merely because of the drama of the whaling operation," said Buckley while waiting for the plane to Kotzebus. "You could also see human relationships working closely. There is a sense of identity and place, which we have largely lost."

And indeed there was. In six days of tension, frustration and cold, no one had uttered an angry word, not even when the whale appeared lost.

"Down there on the ice, we can't afford to get angry," said Warren Nashoopuk, who had returned to join Tuzroyluk's crew after working for half a year with an oil exploration team on Alaska's north slope.

MANY OF the men of Point Hope spend long periods away from the village working or going to schools run by the Federal Bureau of Indian Affairs. Sylvester Keats, for example, was an airline mechanic for Pan American in Los Angeles for eight years before he was drawn back to this barren spit of tundra where hunting means survival.

In addition to hunting the whale, the men would from time to time shoot seals for the blubber used to feed the cooking and heating stove of the camp tent. Young boys would down eider ducks with slingshots, bolos or ice chunks. This was done not for sport, but for supper.

Tuzroyluk, 49, has been hunting caribou, polar bear, fox, seal and wolf since his father fell ill when he was 14 and had to support his family. But the bowhead remains most important to him.

An international whaling agreement now prevents anyone but Eskimos from hunting for the bowhead, which can be as much as 65 feet in length and 65 tons in weight. But just how decimated the species is is a matter of some controversy. The Rare Animal Relief Effort, which has been active in trying to save the world's declining whale population, maintains that the bowhead, the blue and the right are gravely threatened. Other naturalists disagree.

Probe of ocean depths to study earth's crust

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Three French and American research submarines will dive 10,000 feet into a valley that splits a massive undersea mountain chain in the mid-Atlantic Ocean this summer to see how the earth's crust is formed.

Scientists from both nations will probe the cold, black waters of the sea bottom to complete a geologic map of a section of the area considered the seat of the most fundamental process in earth science.

In this steep-walled valley a few miles wide, scientists believe molten rock rises from deep within earth and then moves to the side, causing the sea floor to spread and push Europe and Africa to one side and the Americas to the other.

"This is where the surface of the earth is created," said Dr. James R. Heirtzler, chief U.S. scientist for the expedition known as FAMOUS—for French-American Mid-Ocean Undersea Study.

In a series of preliminary dives into the valley last year, French scientists found evidence of new crustal rock which seemed as if it had been squeezed from a giant toothpaste tube.

The samples are highly magnetic and ranged in age from so young they could not be dated to about 100,000 years old— only yesterday in geologic time scales.

Dr. Clade Riffaud, the French project chief, said that when the sea bottom samples were placed on the decks of surface ships, the rocks cracked and jumped. He said this probably was caused by expanding gas bubbles and severe temperature changes.

The valley floor also is the source of countless tiny earthquakes, as many as a dozen an hour in some areas.

The valley runs down the middle of the mammoth mountain range known as the Mid-Atlantic Ridge. Its mile-high peaks average about 7,200 feet below the surface of the ocean. The range is about 900 miles wide and extends the full length of the Atlantic.

In 1959, scientists discovered that the mid-ocean ridge actually is part of a globe-girdling system winding some 40,000 miles beneath the world's oceans.

Although geologists believe they understand on a broad scale the formation of new oceanic crust and movements of large crustal segments called plates, little is known about the actual processes of crust production. The axis of the mid-ocean ridge never has been examined in detail.

The expedition may give geologists an opportunity to study a section of the ridge and its valley so they can produce a geologic map with as much detail as a city street map.

The Federal Trade Commission has announced its intention to issue a complaint alleging that Wilson's House of Suede, 9844 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills, has made deceptive price savings claims. The proposed complaint alleges that Wilson's merchandise was not offered at special reduced prices as implied by its advertisements, and that consequently, customers at the manufacturing/retailing suede and leather apparel store did not realize advertised price savings.

The proposed complaint alleges that contrary to statements used in Wilson's advertisements:

— In many instances the purportedly reduced prices were not limited to the period of the sale.

— Styles pictured in various Wilson's ads were not subject to the savings indicated in the particular advertisement, nor were the styles subject to a "sale price."

— A substantial supply of suede and leather wearing apparel was not available in respondents stores through the stated range of price savings.

— Wilson's sales facilities were "warehouse" or "factory showrooms" when, in fact, they regularly sold or offered to sell their merchandise in facilities used for the display and sale of their merchandise at retail.

— All merchandise in Wilson's "warehouse" was being offered at reduced prices when in fact only a minimal number of styles were being offered at reduced prices.

— Purchasers would realize a price savings because Wilson's manufacturers suede and leather wearing apparel in its own factory or had made special purchases of material when in fact they did not manufacture all their apparel, nor made special purchases of material.

The Federal Trade Commission "issues a complaint" when it has reason to believe that the law has been violated. Such action does not imply adjudication of the alleged matters. Wilson's House of Suede will now have the opportunity to advise the FTC whether it is interested in having the proceeding disposed of by the entry of a consent order.

Driver alert

To prevent drunk and confused drivers from heading the wrong way on freeways, the state highway division is testing a special attention-getting device with the capacity of airport runway lights. Five 200-watt lights have been installed in an exit ramp near San Diego along with a camera to record reactions of motorists.

When a car headed the wrong way trips an air-tube switch on the pavement, the red lights shine for 20 seconds. Earlier attempts to attract the attention of drunk drivers — such as wrong-way signs and reflectors — have failed. According to a state engineer, drunk drivers have tunnel vision. "Their eyes are glued to the roadway and they can't see anything else," the engineer said.

Price of gas 'may ease off'

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Gasoline prices are stabilizing and may even ease off somewhat, executives of two major oil companies predicted Saturday.

"The world supply of crude oil is now just about what it was before the Arab embargo," said J.B. St. Clair, executive vice president of Shell Oil Co.

Z.D. Bonner of the Gulf Oil Co., agreed.

"My feeling is that they will not go much higher than the 55 to 60 cents a gallon which now is general, and I believe they will hang in that range unless the foreign oil-producing countries increase crude prices."

The ruling oilmen still hate

By MAX B. SKELTON

HOUSTON (AP) — Many oilmen have referred to June 7, 1954, as doomsday and as a day of infamy.

Next Friday will be the 20th anniversary of the 5-3 Supreme Court ruling that held the Federal Power Commission should regulate the wellhead price of natural gas sold into interstate commerce.

Frank Ikard, president of the American Petroleum Institute, says the decision quite probably did more to bring about the current energy shortage than any other one action by the courts, government, or industry.

The ruling followed 16 years of refusal by the FPC to accept such jurisdiction on grounds the Natural Gas Act of 1938 states that provisions of the act shall not apply to producers or gatherers.

The five-member court majority disagreed. Their opinion said Congress had sought to regulate wholesales of natural gas occurring at both ends of the interstate transmission systems.

JUSTICE William Douglas, a frequent oil industry critic, disagreed. His dissent said the price at which the producer can sell his gas determines the price he is able or willing to pay for it if he buys from other wells.

Ikard and others contend time has proven the Douglas argument to be correct.

Since the court ruling, the number of domestic oil and gas wells drilled annually has dropped from a record 58,000 to 26,400. Demand for natural gas, meanwhile, has more than doubled. Proved domestic natural gas reserves have declined in five of the past six years.

IKARD says the 1954 ruling amounts to a clear case of legislation by the courts.

"The dismal 20-year record of federal price controls on interstate sales of natural gas has proven the failure of government interference in the marketplace," Ikard says. "What is needed is an end to all government price controls in all segments of the petroleum industry, plus consistent government policies that will encourage rather than discourage drilling."

Battle lines between consumer and producer states date back to the 1940s in the dispute over wellhead price controls.

The producers, backed by such political powers as the late House Speaker Sam Rayburn and President Lyndon B. Johnson, then a member of the U.S. Senate, successfully maneuvered two decontrol bills through Congress only to see them vetoed by Presidents Harry S. Truman in 1950 and Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1956.

NUMEROUS decontrol bills have been introduced since then but have rarely gotten out of committee.

Nine such bills proposing deregulation in some form or other are before Congress now. President Nixon has endorsed proposals to decontrol newly discovered natural gas dedicated to interstate sales and decontrol old gas as current contracts expire.

Consumer interests are backing four other bills that would continue interstate controls.

The two decontrol bills that were vetoed passed Congress only after sharp floor debates and close votes.

Rayburn relinquished the gavel twice to make floor speeches in behalf of the bills.

IN 1949, the Kerr Bill passed the House 183-131 but a 44-38 Senate vote included an amendment that sent it back to the House. It was then that Rayburn moved to the floor to participate in a bitter consumer-producer debate that preceded a 176-174 vote that sent the bill to the White House.

Truman vetoed the measure on April 15, 1950, saying it did not seem wise public policy to remove FPC's authority to regulate.

In 1956, the Harris Bill survived a close 209-203 House vote with Rayburn's help and then was approved by the Senate 53 to 38.

Eisenhower said he agreed with the basic provisions of the Harris measure but based his veto on what he termed as "arrogant" lobbying by a small segment of the oil and gas industry.

Secret Witness cases rewards

As part of the Independent, Press-Telegram's Secret Witness program, 10 selected summaries of cases in which rewards are offered are printed in the Independent and Press-Telegram each Sunday and Thursday.

Rewards will remain in effect, however, for all cases previously published.

Rewards also will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of suspects in any other major criminal cases, or the apprehension of fugitives from justice, not covered in these summaries. These rewards will vary in amount depending on the seriousness of the offense.

To ensure eligibility for Secret Witness rewards, informants are required to channel all information directly through Secret Witness, either by calling the special Secret Witness telephone number or by writing in care of the special Secret Witness post office box.

The summaries follow:

—A $2,000 reward is offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of James A. Hunt III, 23, slain during the holdup of an all-night market in Torrance about 4:30 a.m. Jan. 29, 1974. Hunt, night clerk in the market at 2215 W. Artesia Blvd., was shot three times through the head execution style, and his body left propped against a packing case in a rear room.

— A $2,000 reward will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Richard Lauren Anderson, 28-year-old Life Tabernacle minister and Riverside business executive who was slain in Compton early Sept. 12, 1973. His body, throat slashed and beaten about the head, was found lying in the parking lot of an apartment house at 246 S. Colin St. Robbery apparently was the motive.

— Rewards totaling $2,811 — including $2,000 guaranteed by Secret Witness and $811 pledged by the Fleet Reserve Association Brand 43 of Long Beach — will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Robert and Florence Buckley of Long Beach on July 10, 1973. Mr. and Mrs. Buckley, both elderly and in ailing health were shot through the head execution-style by an intruder who ransacked the house and took the contents of a piggy bank.

— A $2,000 reward is offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Roy Long, 31-year-old Compton trailer park resident, on Aug. 31, 1973. Long was shot to death by an assailant as he stepped out of his trailer to investigate a commotion in the park.

— A $2,000 reward will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Michiko Zermeno, 41, found beaten to death in the living room of her Long Beach home at 321 Maine Ave. on May 11, 1973. Her 5-year-old daughter Arison told police "a tall man" came to the home early that morning and started beating both her and her mother before the little girl broke loose to run and hide. Detectives said they are seeking a white man about 25 year old, with long brown hair.

— A $2,000 reward is offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of 11-year-old Linda O'Keefe, kidnapped and strangled in Newport Beach on July 6, 1973. Witnesses told police the girl, who left Lincoln Intermediate School in the Corona Del Mar area of Newport Beach at noon on that day to walk a mile away was picked up by a white male 24-30 years old with brown, curly hair, driving a turquoise colored van, 1969 or later model. Linda's fully clothed body was found the following day in the Back Bay area of Newport Beach.

— A $2,000 reward will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murder of five young men in the Southland area since Dec. 26, 1973. The bodies, most of them sexually mutilated and one decapitated, were found in Long Beach, Seal Beach, Huntington Beach and in the Los Angeles harbor area, but investigators are convinced the murders all were committed by the same person. Three bodies, those of young men about 20 years old, never have been identified. The two bodies identified were those of Camp Pendelton Marine Edward Daniel Moore, 20, found in Seal Beach Dec. 26, 1973, and Ronnie Jean Wiebe, 21, found in Seal Beach July 30, 1973.

—A $2,000 reward is offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Deborah Ann Baker, 18, whose strangled body was found Mar. 21, 1973, in a vacant field adjacent to Los Coyotes County Club, near Beach Boulevard and Roseerans Avenue in Fullerton. Investigators theorize that the victim last seen alive when she left her Fullerton apartment of 1313 E. Wilshire Ave., on the previous day to go on a job interview, was killed in the early morning hours at another location and dumped in the field.

— A $2,025 reward will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the killers of pharmacist Patrick Horgan, 59, shot to death at the Horgan Pharmacy, 1403 Cherry Ave., on March 9, 1973. Horgan was shot in the back by one of three black men in the early or middle 20s who posed as customers. The would-be holdup men fled without taking money after the shot was fired.

— A $500 reward will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of Freddie Tidmore, alias Fred Douglas Mabson, 20, sought in connection with the holdup shooting of John Bell, 33-year-old clerk at the Wooden Shoe Liquor Store, 1053 Orange Ave., Dec. 20, 1973. Bell, critically wounded, identified Tidmore as his assailant.

YOUR HOROSCOPE by JEANE DIXON

Forecast for Monday

Your birthday today: Opens a normal year in which much experience is gained with no more difficulty than is to be expected. The temptation is to let good enough suffice, trusting that the same ease of achievement will continue indefinitely. There is a big premium on initiative extra drive. Today's natives seek constant movement, either symbolic or actual travel.

Aries (March 21-April 19): Tidy up your home and work place, plan for contingencies while you have the time and space for thought. Keep in touch with those who have the details you need to know about.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): Cooperation is free and easy for reasonable projects, moderate goals. Late hours find you paying the piper for some recent indiscretion or error.

Gemini (May 21-June 20): Being prompt and alert for opportunity is part of your success—getting the job done well is the rest of it. Finish whatever can be concluded today.

Cancer (June 21-July 22): By day's end you encounter a passing chance for a decision likely have to make it without adequate information. Even trivial choices involve fundamental changes of direction.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22): Be deliberate, think what you really want, but move quietly now to get it. There is no minute to waste on trivial amenities or on pastimes, much as it may seem that way.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You're at cross purposes with friends but nonetheless better off by speaking up for what you think is most needed. Start nothing new, concentrate on completing pending tasks.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): It may seem to you that nothing is going smoothly. Stay on the job, attend those items that are within reach if you can't get at the main problem.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do all you can to translate recent physical changes into cash, materials for future use, improved facilities. Defer any actual outlays for the time being; avoid pointless travel.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Come out in the open, declare your intentions this afternoon. Your friends are headed in the same direction. You can gather a good group for social action.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Business hours are spent in rolling readjustments, trouble-shooting, with things falling into place quite late in the day. Use the evening to finalize, offer corrections.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Resist the urge to stir things up. There's already enough going on to provide a circus and sideshow. For later hours find or give a party, see a good show.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20): It's a day of subtle revelation—you notice details which had previously escaped attention. Revisions of plans are acceptable on all sides. Find time to help young people

Your right to know why

If you are denied credit and you believe it was because of your sex or marital status, you should:

• Demand to know the reason for the denial—a right guaranteed by the 1971 Fair Credit Reporting Act. Usually the lender will refer you to a credit reporting agency (such as TRW Credit Data) which stores credit-related information on borrowers which has been supplied to them by credit grantors who subscribe to their service. A copy of that information may be obtained at no charge or minimal charge by writing the appropriate credit reporting agency.

• If the information included in the report is false, notify the credit grantor in question (the bank, savings and loan, department store, credit card firm or gas company) and explain the error. If the credit grantor is at fault, he should send the revised credit information to the credit reporting agency and the agency should update its files.

• If there is no credit information on you (which is often the case of married women) and you have been paying on a loan assumed by you and your husband, you should contact the credit grantor and inform him of that fact. You may request that the loan be listed in your name and you may establish a separate credit accounting from the credit reporting agency.

"This is something that more women should start thinking about doing—now," said Cheri Cole, assistant director of legislative affairs for TRW Credit Data and a liaison between the credit reporting agency and women's groups in the area. "Many times a woman will be denied credit because she has no credit rating. And this same woman may have been paying on a loan, regularly, month after month for years, and never realize that the loan is really in her husband's name."

MS. COLE ADDED that any woman who is paying on a loan or charge account would be well advised to find out if the credit is in her name and if it's not, should take the appropriate steps to have it changed. Most creditors, she believes, are trying to

Lenders complying with law

There have been a few isolated complaints —from women who learned that they would have to reapply for existing credit because they'd married; from another who found that her check guarantee card would only be reissued in her husband's name; from several more who had neither the income nor the employment record to qualify for the credit they were demanding.

But by and large, adherence to California's new credit law would appear to be excellent. If women are being discriminated against, the authorities aren't hearing about it. And the credit grantors—banks, department stores and savings and loan companies—are saying that their policies of equal credit opportunities preceded the Waxman credit bill by years.

"The bill (AB 312) didn't affect us at all," said a spokesman for Bank of America of the new state law which provides legal recourse for a woman who believes she has been discriminated against in the granting of credit because of her sex or marital status.

"If a woman has sufficient income and credit history, she gets the loan. We've been following this policy for years."

A SIMILAR explanation was offered by a public relations representative for United California Bank. The bill, he said, had little affect on UCB's working policies, though it did prompt certain changes in the language on their application forms—language that could be construed as discriminatory.

And so it went as spokesmen for Sears, JCPenney, Bullock's and various banks and savings and loans explained their companies' policies regarding women. Though several were not familiar with the bill, almost all understood its intent and were cognizant of the growing demand by women to establish credit in their own right.

Their policies, they insisted, had ceased to be discriminatory some time ago. If a woman met their requirements, she was granted the credit for which she was applying.

This willing compliance to the law, particularly from banks and savings and loan companies, may seem a bit curious coming, as it does, in the wake of the intense opposition from the California Bankers Association last fall. At that time they contended that women should not be treated the same as men in connection with credit because women's earnings and property are treated differently under the state's community property laws...and because the laws make it more difficult to collect a bad debt from a woman.

"The retail credit people—from department stores, gas companies and credit card firms—were more inclined to go along with the bill from the beginning. Some even helped develop the bill's language," said an aide for the bill's author, Assemblyman Henry Waxman, D-Los Angeles. "They realized that women were their biggest consumers anyway. And, too, they were dealing with smaller amounts of money so they had less to lose.

"The banks and savings and loans, on the other hand, are dealing with home improve-

Andes crash survivors talk about their ordeal

By CAROL IVY
Staff Writer

Roberto Canessa stood in the quiet lobby of the Beverly Hills Hotel, quickly explaining he'd be right back, he only wanted to dash upstairs and change into his swim trunks. Then we could go to the pool—couldn't we?—and it would be oh so much nicer than sitting in the bar.

"Maverick," he whisper-shouted, "that's Maverick!"

Sure enough, there was filmland-gorgeous James Garner strolling across the soft carpet.

"Yesterday," Canessa announced over his shoulder, heading for the stairs, "I saw Elizabeth Taylor."

Fernando Parrado laughed, slowly shook his head, as if to say his friend was very young.

Nando himself is not so old—24 years. Young, indeed to have gone through what he and Roberto—now just 21—and 14 fellow Uruguayans lived through nearly two years ago.

THEY ARE the survivors.

And now Nando and Roberto are traveling around the world, on behalf of them all—to explain, to clear up misconceptions.

They also are promoting a book describing their ordeal: "Alive, the Story of the Andes Survivors," by Piers Paul Read (Lippincott, $10).

The book, Nando said, is as accurate as can be because the British author was picked by all 16 young men from a host of writers wanting to relate their story, and because Read diligently spent an entire year and a half in Montevideo, interviewing the survivors and their families.

Nando and Roberto became the superheroes of the tragedy after they climbed, slid and stumbled their way for 10 days through the Andes to bring Chilean rescuers back for the 14 others who'd spent 71 days 12,000 feet up in the cordillera (mountain range).

They said they did not mind answering any questions about the ordeal. But, they regretted some of the immediate sensationalism seized upon by the press after the story was leaked of how they managed to live as long as they had.

The terrifying saga began Oct. 12, 1972, when the Old Christians amateur rugby team from Montevideo, along with some family members and boosters, set out in a chartered plane for rugby matches in Santiago, Chile.

On Friday the thirteenth, the plane with 45 people aboard crashed in a remote spot in the middle of the Andes.

After eight days, the Uruguayan, Chilean and Argentinian governments abandoned their searches. But the families and girlfriends in Montevideo never gave up hope and continued to search in whatever ways they could.

THERE WERE 32 survivors initially on the mountain. After a few days several had died from wounds received in the crash and on the 17th day an avalanche covered the ripped-apart airplane fuselage the survivors were living in and killed eight more—including Nando Parrado's mother and his sister, Susana.

Finally, on Dec. 21, Nando and Roberto completed a 10-day excursion out of the mountains and stumbled upon a Chilean shepherd who took the two bearded, thin bedraggled young men to his hut and summoned help for the rest.

But then, when everyone had been safely helicoptered to a hospital in San Fernando and parents and friends had heard the dread news of which loved ones had lived and which had died, the 16 faced telling their tale. It was a story of how they lived more than two months in below freezing weather after crashing in deep, deep snow with ostensibly nothing more to eat than the few candy bars, some cheese and bottles of wine and brandy the travelers bought for the flight.

A few told the doctors who examined them that they finally had resorted, when faced with death from starvation, to eating the flesh of their dead, frozen companions. All staunch Roman Catholics, one young man on the mountain had likened what they had to do to Communion, making the eating easier for some of the more squeamish in the group.

The examining physicians had suspected as much. In spite of a few relatively minor problems, the young men were just too healthy for the length of time they had spent in the desolate cordillera.

But the men vowed not to reveal the information to anyone else until they could do so together, back home in Montevideo.

However, word got out and parents of the boys—of those who were alive and those who had died—initially were shocked beyond words, and then most accepted what had happened.

But when headlines around the world screamed CANNIBALISM, the young men talked about it as best they could, openly and without shame.

SPRAWLED IN a lawn chair beside the pool, curly hair tousled, his eyes growing slightly more serious, Roberto Canessa said "those of us who lived all feel like brothers now and all the families are like our own parents. The families of the boys who died treat us as their sons."

He said he worries constantly about the feelings of the families at home when he reads stories "that dwell on the eating of the dead bodies. The most important parts of what happened on the mountain are the feelings the accident created among those of us who survived. What it did to our lives. For example, why was I meant to survive and not someone else?

"I want now," Roberto continued, speaking excellent English, "to help other people in the world, more than I did before. I enjoy life, as you can see. Here I am at the Beverly Hills Hotel, sitting in the sunshine. Some people would say 'he should not be there when others died,' but I ask what that has to do with it?

"The most important thing in life now," the young medical student said, "is to be useful to other people."

SOCIALLY SPEAKING

Zoo's who at Hiatts

By CAROLYN McDOWELL

HERE IS A story that could be a candidate for "Believe It Or Not" by Ripley or "Strange as It Seems" by that other fellow whose name I forget.

The photo accompanying today's column was a result of a recent trip to Magic Mountain by the Jim Hiatt family.

Here is a note from Jim that tells the story.

"My 8-year-old brother, Jeff Hiatt, started by winning the large lion. I gave him three dimes to pitch and he won.

"My 3-year-old daughter, Kim, won her poodle throwing soft balls into a basket. She only tried the game once.

"Lori, the 7-year-old daughter, won her teddy bear on the same game with one try. She also won the small elephant. This game was knocking cats off ledges with baseballs. It took two tries to get the elephant.

"Ted is 2 years old. He won nothing. He didn't try anything either. The small dog he is holding in the picture we won by knocking over tin cans with bean bags.

"I won the large Snoopy throwing softballs into a milk can. One try.

"The rabbit was a prize for throwing a wooden ring around a coke bottle. Took two tries. "My wife didn't win anything. She didn't try anything either.

"We spent about $6 playing the games."

It took two trips to the car (fortunately a station wagon) to load the toys.

JUNE IS HERE and the scent of orange blossoms fills the air.

Headed for a honeymoon home in Medford, Ore., are the new Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Leon (the former Terri Hawkins).

The couple exchanged vows in a formal ceremony at Lakewood Presbyterian Church. A reception followed at Allen Center.

Terri is a graduate of local schools and State University. Her parents are Jess and Louise Hawkins.

The bridegroom is a graduate of UCLA and will enter his senior year at Princeton, where he is studying to become a minister.

His parents are Salvador and Anna Leon.

TONY AND ROSEMARY Scott hosted a prewedding party for Pat Thielen and his bride-to-be, Grace Crillo of Marina Del Rey.

Among those offering congratulations were Bob and Leora Haub, John and Bev Thielen, Tom and Dee Mckernie and Mark and Kitty Wolfson.

JUNE WAS THE month chosen by Martin and Virginia Singleton a quarter century ago for their wedding.

This column ALWAYS deals with anniversary parties after they happen—for reasons I can't remember at the moment—but the main reason is the fear of spoiling a surprise for some one.

Today all of you get to be "in" on the surprise party plans for the silver celebration for Martin and Virginia.

Party will take place on Saturday next in the Singletons' home. Hostesses are Martin's mother, Mattie Singleton, and sisters, Betty Stokes and Judy Searcy and their families.

Plan is for the Singletons' neighbors to lure them from home so the hostesses can decorate for the party.

Nowyou know all about it—and the Singletons don't.

The former Long Beachers now reside in Yucaipa and the 40 guests will caravan to that city bearing copies of this story as part of the surprise.

BETTER HURRY on this one.

The 1944 Winter and Summer classes of San Pedro High School are looking for lost grads for dinner and dancing aboard the QM.

The date is June 8, which is practically immediately.

Get your reservation in to Adeline Adams Hilzer, 1818 W. 248th St., Lomita, 90717.

"SO LONG, IT'S been good to know you," was the sentiment expressed Thursday when friends gathered at International City Club to bid farewell to Jeri Johnson, popular assistant director of Long Beach Heart Association. She and husband, Johnny, will be departing these shores shortly for Brazil, where Johnny has taken a one-year post with the United Nations Development Program, with an option to remain an additional four years if they desire.

Jeri confided she's really coming along with her Spanish and now can say "pavo pajaro." Guess knowing "turkey bird" will get you by some places. Maybe the poultry market at thanksgiving.

Leading plaudits were Gene Bishop, president of L.B. Heart; Dr. Ed Palarea, new state president; Marion Bach, director; Darrell and Marky Neighbors, Mason Kight, Adm. Ned Sprow, Margaret DeCristofaro, Jan Simonian, Shirley Wild, Shirley Coscarelli and Leonard Bendinger.

The Johnsons will visit relatives in Minnesota and tour Florida and Jamaica before their trek South.

THE NEW ETIQUETTE

Make guests feel welcome

By MAUREEN ELENA REARDON

Guesting season is upon us. As Aunt Tillie or the buddy you haven't seen since the '57 high school tournament descends upon you, remember you don't have to be Conrad Hilton to have an overnight guest. Use a little forethought and consideration and both you and your visitor will be glad it all happened.

The first problem is where your guest should sleep. It's great if you have one of those big old houses with rooms which hibernate until a guest appears, but people don't expect it. Most people are quite satisfied with a hide-a-bed, couch or cot. Camping is so common these days you might find your guest has brought along a sleeping bag and is planning to pitch it in the middle of your living room floor.

If you don't have an extra bed, try a rental company. But be sure you know what you're getting. The largest bed which most companies rent is 48 inches wide, providing considerably less room than the standard 54-inch "double bed." "Single" rollaways from rental firms are usually 30 inches wide.

BABY CRIBS can be rented, too, but here again you must be careful. A federal law says that manufacturers can no longer ship or make cribs with bars more than 2⅜ inches apart. However, rental companies still have some with bars spaced far enough apart that a baby's head might get caught. If you rent a crib, try to get one as close to the federal standards as possible.

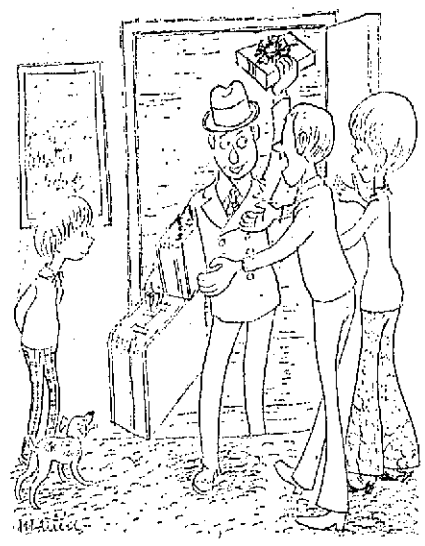

If it's possible, give your guest privacy. If you can sleep on the couch and your friend can take your room, by all means be generous. Guests are usually extra tired from traveling, and peace and comfort are appreciated.

Should you place parents in the same room with their children? If you must and if the parents wish it.

Tell your guest what time meals are usually served, and find out if he has any food preferences. But don't think that you have to spend all of your time in the kitchen preparing a gourmet meal.

YOU MAY WANT to take the guest out to dinner, which is fine. But unless the guest makes an offer to pay, you will be expected to pick up the whole tab. Your guest may want to treat you to dinner as his way of thanking you for your hospitality. By all means accept the gesture without making a scene in the restaurant.

Guests don't like to feel that they are being waited upon by Manners the butler. That's why it's a good idea to have the bed set up before the guest arrives (if the bed isn't going to be placed in the kitchen) so he doesn't have to guiltily watch you do your work. And you should tell the guest if he has refrigerator privileges. Make your guest feel free to snack before his crying stomach cuts into the conversation.

The responsibilities of the guest are few. He should pick up after himself. He should make his bed each morning. He should expect to spend most of his time with the people who are putting him up; it's rude to gallivant around when visiting other people and just talk to the host or hostess at mealtime and bedtime. It's also very presumptous to invite other people over to the host or hostess' house.

Traditionally the visitor brings some gift to the people who provide the bed and board . . . a bottle of wine or flowers. Expensive gifts and things for the house usually don't go over too well.

Two hiked out to bring help

Montevideo and drives race cars on the professional circuit, said he believes his own and the other boys' educational and family backgrounds helped them survive in the numbers they did.

"We were from what you would call wealthier families of Montevideo and had been schooled by the Christian Brothers, who stress discipline," the blond South American noted. "Also, we were (and still are) a champion rugby team, meaning we all were in excellent physical condition. These factors worked to our advantage. Because of our schooling, for instance, we were able to chart the sun and stars and determine at least which direction to walk when we headed out of the cordillera.

"Also, as rugby players we are somewhat accustomed to bodily pain and so perhaps were more able to endure more than others might have been."

Nando and Roberto were selected as savior-expeditionaries by the other survivors because they were the healthiest of the group. Days before they were to leave, the two were fed extra portions of meat and allowed additional clothing—pampered in preparation for the hazardous journey.

"I admit," Roberto recalled, "that toward the time we were to leave, I did not want to go. I was scared of the unknown and knew that in the plane I would survive at least a while longer. I was frightened of what lay ahead and just knew I would die. But finally my desire to help the others, some of whom were growing weaker all the time, overcame my fear."

ROBERTO Canessa, above, and Fernando Parrado, right, in rugby uniform, walked in the Andes for 10 days to bring rescuers to the 12,000-foot-high crash site where they and 14 fellow survivors spent more than two months in sub-zero weather.

EXPLAINING IT took four or five months to resume a somewhat normal life, Nando indicated he often wishes people at home would talk a little less about the crash. He is still intensely afraid of flying and, in fact, had done most of the American portion of the tour by car.

Nando said he found that during the ordeal he was much stronger than he ever thought he could be, after both his mother and his sister died in his arms inside the wreck of the plane.

"Of course," he said, "we are all very religious and it helped to pray and feel near to God."

"Yes," Roberto added, "all the snow made us feel so small. Some of us had never seen snow before the accident and now wish never to see it again, except in pictures.

"There was nothing else around except for us and the snow and we needed God to be our friend. That is why I promised Him that if we were saved I would make my own life of some use to other people."

correct the credit situation for women and will be amenable to the woman's request.

•If all fails and the company still refuses to grant you credit (and you believe it is because of your sex or marital status) you will probably have to retain an attorney to press your case. Like many civil rights laws, AB 312 does not make it a crime to deny credit to women on the basis of sex; it merely establishes grounds for a civil suit. You may also contact Judith Ashmann in the attorney general's office, 217 W. 1st St., Los Angeles, 90012. According to Ms. Ashman, denials must have taken place after Jan. 1, 1974. She suggests that women keep copies of all correspondences with the credit grantor.

AT WIT'S END

On the road to being a Van Cliburn

By ERMA BOMBECK

I was browsing in a music store last Saturday when the sound of a melody stopped me dead in my tracks.

I became rigid, my palms started to sweat and a wave of nausea swept over my body. Unable to help myself I was drawn like a magnet to the room where the music originated. Opening the door I said mechanically, "It's 'The March Of The Porcupines,' isn't it?"

The teacher and the small child on the piano bench and the mother sitting on a chair nearby looked up startled, "Oh yes," said the mother numbly. "She's playing it in the recital."

THERE IS something about the song your child plays in the piano recital that is as repetitive as a Hungarian cabbage dinner. It haunts you the rest of your life. I even knew one mother who underwent shock treatments and the only thing left in her memory bank was a haunting melody, "There's A Daffodil Left In The Bottom Of My Teacup", a drum solo which her son performed in a music recital.

The first time my son played, "The March Of The Porcupines" it sounded familiar. Later I realized I associated it with a friend of mine who once fainted over a keyboard. Mrs. Miller, our son's music teacher assured me that after nine weeks of practice, practice, practice, it would sound completely different.

When the recital was seven weeks away, I told my husband I didn't want to be a mother anymore. The "March Of The Porcupines" was getting through to me and I felt that physically I was deteriorating. He assured me the Mother of Van Cliburn had endured The March Of The Porcupines and so should I.

WHEN THE recital was four weeks away, our bird died for no particular reason. However, it was suspicious that his wings were cupped around each ear.

The critical period arrived two weeks before the recital. Our son was thumping, thumping, thumping (with feeling, feeling, feeling) through TMOTP, when my husband came home early one afternoon. I had a crown of flowers around my head and was sprinkling petals from a nosegay around the living room. "It's all right," he said softly. "Only two weeks to go."

The voice of the mother in the music store jolted me back to reality. "It doesn't sound like much now, but she has 11 weeks to practice. The music is familiar to you. Did your child play it in a recital?"

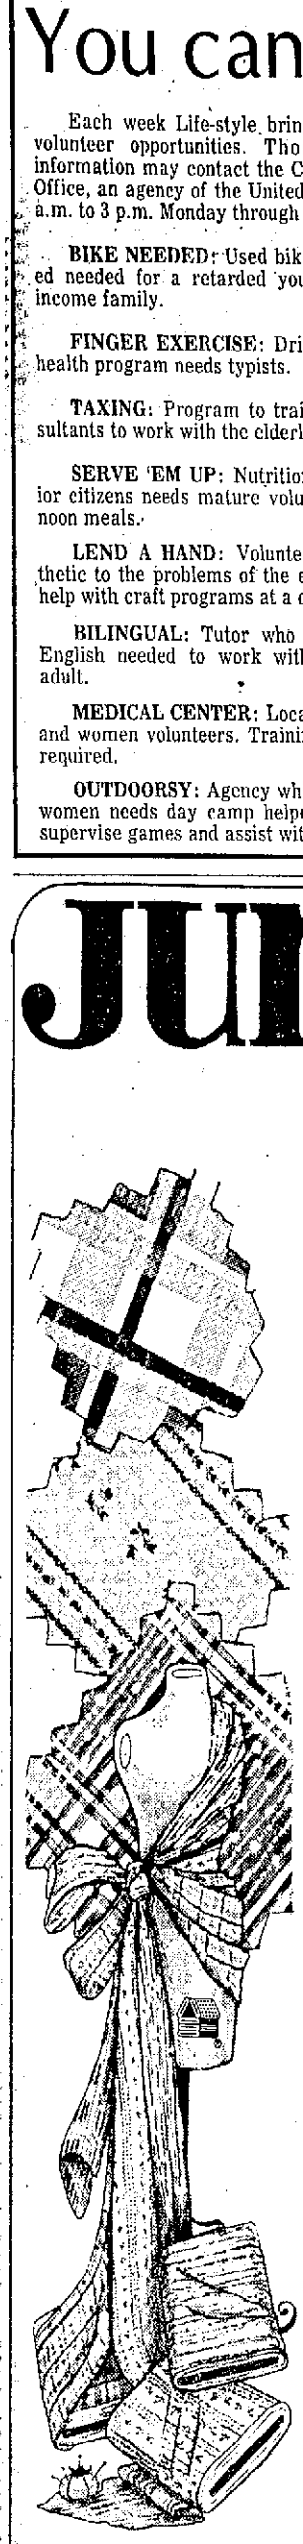

"Actually no," I smiled wanly. "He practiced it for nine weeks and came down with measles on the morning of the recital."

She was crying when I left.

Credit where credit is due

ment loans, mortgages, loans for automobiles, vacations and so on. These people were concerned that they wouldn't get their money—large sums of money, perhaps—if a woman borrower defaulted."

THE AIDE explained that under current state laws a couple's community property is not generally considered responsible for the debts of the wife. Changes in that law, however, have been achieved through Senator Myrvin Dymally's community property bill. As of Jan. 1, 1975, the community property will be responsible for the debts of the wife as well as the husband.

"It's understandable, I think, that a lender would be wary of extending credit to a married woman. He knows that if she defaults he won't be able to get into the community property for repayment like he could if the borrower were a man. But this should change—it's changing already, in fact—as lenders get more assurances that they will be able to get their money back from a loan."

The aide added that in light of the lending institutions' opposition to AB 312, he was surprised to hear of their professed long-time nondiscriminatory policies. But then, he observed, an interview is an interview "and it's always good public relations these days to say that you have an equal opportunity policy about almost anything."

A NOW LEGISLATIVE affairs analyst, a deputy attorney general in Los Angeles and several women familiar with the recent credit situation in California were similarly puzzled by the easy compliance of local lenders to the new law.

If the banks and department stores had been so generous in their credit policies, they said, there wouldn't have been any need for the bill in the first place. (AB 312 and the Dymally community property bill received top priority consideration from NOW and other feminist groups in 1973.) Besides, they personally knew too many women who had been denied credit by department stores, rejected for loans and told (in the case of young married women, especially) that their incomes would not be counted in the bank's consideration of their mortgage application because it was possible that they might get pregnant.

But since the bill took affect last Jan. 1, they conceded, there had been no major problems. Maybe the bill was too new. Or maybe too few women knew about it. At any rate there had been nothing thus far that they could really sink their teeth into.

"About the only trend we've noticed is that some department stores are requiring a woman to reapply for credit if she marries," said Kathy Timlin of NOW. "There is no similar requirement for a man who marries.

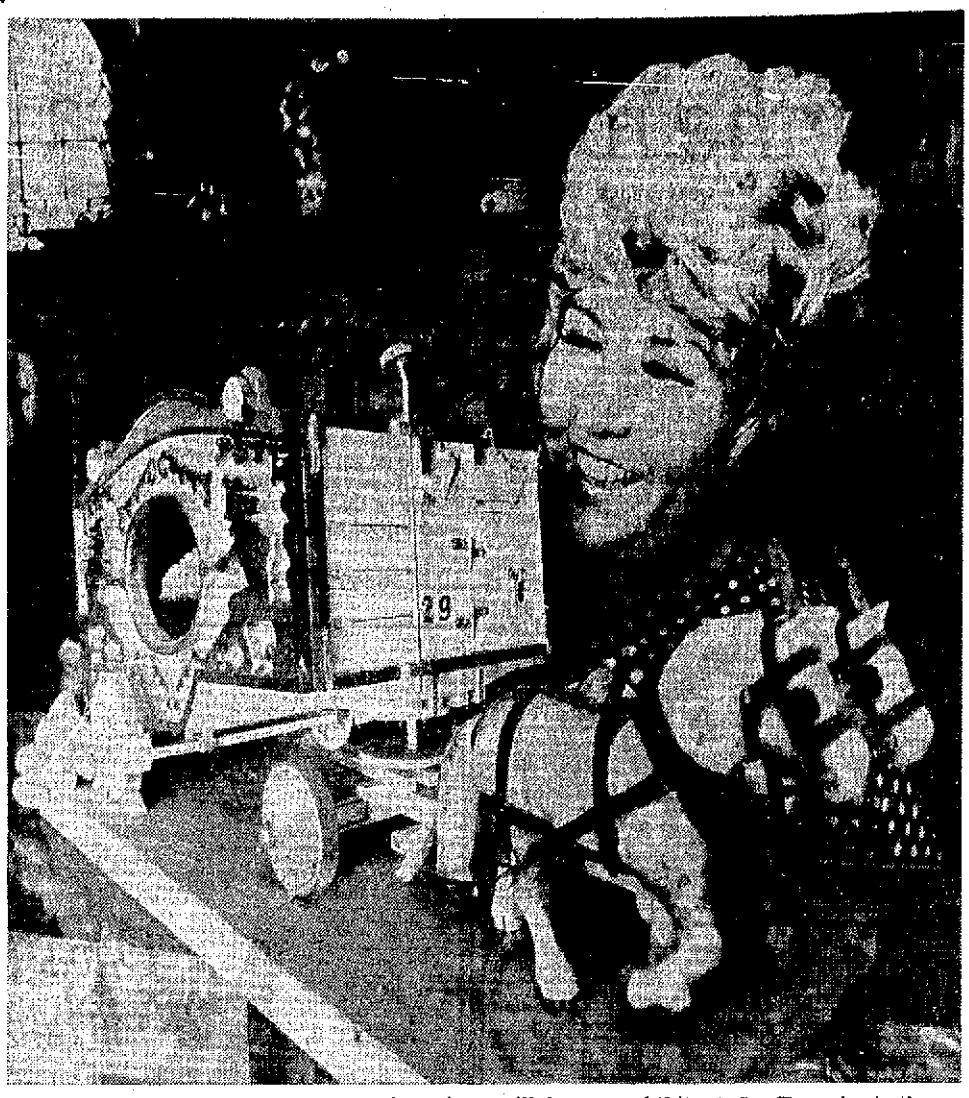

"It seems that if you marry and retain your maiden name there's no problem. But if you assume your husband's name they require you to reapply for credit and insist on getting your husband's signature."

A spokesman for Bullock's, which is one of the department stores cited by Ms. Timlin, explained that they only required a woman to reapply for credit because she had changed her name. Sears, however, had no similar requirement. "We just ask that she fill out a special form we have — a form we also use for changes of address and other new information — to notify us that she's using another name."

Judith Ashman, a lawyer with the attorney general's office in Los Angeles, said she would be interested in hearing from women who have had problems obtaining credit but that to date there have been no complaints that were clear-cut enough to take to court.

Of the complaints they've investigated, in fact, none have turned out to be more than instances where the applicant's salary was too low or her job history too short to qualify for credit.

"We realize that the credit issue is going to be a sticky one and that the problems are not going to be easy to pin down. Still, the attorney general's office is prepared to use its authority to enforce the new law wherever we can.

FASCINATING FABRICS

Telling right from wrong side

By FRANCES DIETRICH

Mrs. R. W., River Falls, Wis., requests: "Please write about the right and wrong side of fabric. Don't say, 'Ask the sales clerk.' They don't always have the answers."

No, they don't. The great variety of fabrics, constant changeover due to the demands of fashion, plus increasing problems of "store keeping," make it impossible for managers to keep salespeople updated.

Let's start with the fabric on the original bolt. It's the practice of most textile companies, particularly the larger ones, to double and roll goods with the right side toward the inside of the bolt. This protects the right side from soil and abrasion and makes it easier for the store manager to drape a display. If you're buying from the original bolt, mark the right side with a pin.

HOWEVER, there are times when the fabric has been re-rolled onto smaller cylinders by a middle man before it reaches a store. The right side could then be on the outside of the bolt. You may find the words "right side" on the selvage, a policy which the textile industry is considering for all fabric in the future. But, in the absence of this, or if you are judging a cut piece of fabric, the following guidelines can help you determine which is the right side.

With woven fabric, even an unlettered selvage may be a guide. Usually, the right side of this narrow "self edge" will have a more finished appearance.

If the fabric is a plain weave, such as broadcloth or chambray, in a solid color or with yarn-dyed stripes or plaids, there is no difference in front or back. If printed, the print is sharper on the right side.

A twill weave, such as gabardine with its diagonal "ribs," will give you these clues: Wool and simulated wool fabrics usually have the rib slanting from lower left to upper right. The wrong side would show the ribs running in the opposite direction. Cotton or cotton-type fabrics customarily are woven with the twill going from lower right to upper left. Flipped over, the direction is reversed — the wrong side.

SATIN weave, the third basic type of woven fabric, shows its right side with a brighter, shinier face. With most woven fabric, you'll find that the side which is most attractive or has a more distinct woven pattern is the right one. The napped side of fabrics, except for specialties, is the right side — ready to show off its peach-bloom face.

As to the right and wrong side of knits, use these pointers. Double knits are identical on both sides except for novelty patterns and you could choose either side. Rib knits have the rib on the right side. Tricot knits have a fine herringbone rib on the wrong side.

In most knits, the face of the fabric will be smoother and more lustrous than the underside. You can also check to determine the right side of knits by taking it in both hands and pulling in the direction of the greatest amount of stretch. The cut edge will usually roll toward the right side.

Having determined the right side of woven or knit, use pins or chalk at intervals as reminders. While cutting out the garment, mark the right side of small pieces before pushing them aside. It will save time, when you need them later.

READER SERVICE: A half-yard of fabric and a zipper will put you on the right side of your favorite tennis player. Write for free instruction sheet — tennis racquet cover. Send a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Frances Dietrich, P.O. Box 5790, St. Louis, Mo. 63121. ft

CHEF OF THE WEEK

A sport about kitchen duty

By MILDRED K. FLANARY

At the mention of his name, one might expect to find him only on the basketball court. But he likes being in the kitchen, too. Today's chef of the week, William (Bill) Fraser, is basketball coach at Long Beach City College, a post that, unfortunately, leave him little off-court, in-kitchen time.

Born in a small town in Ontario Canada, midway between Montreal and Ottawa, Frazer grew up in Detroit, Mich., where his entry into the world of sports got off to an early start.

He participated in both track and basketball in high school and college — the University of Detroit and Michigan State University, from which he was graduated with a B.A. degree.

He then took to the air for a stint in the Air Force, landing ultimately in Calfornia.

HE ENROLLED at Long Beach State University where he obtained his teaching credential and an M.A. degree in physical education.

Fraser started his teaching and coaching careers at Wilson High School where he remained for 15 years, 6 as junior varsity coach and 9 as varsity coach.

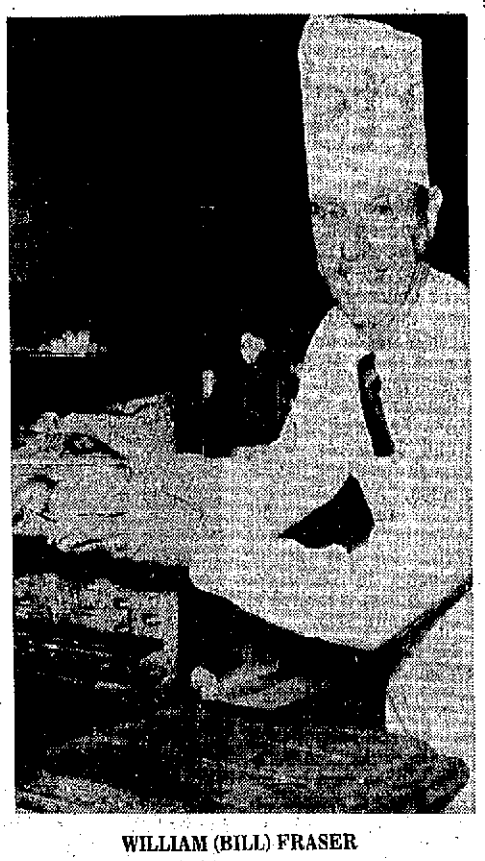

He says, "The highlight of my career at Wilson High was winning more than 20 games each of the last three years, and the Moore League championship two of the last three years.

Then another highlight came into Fraser's career. He was named basketball coach at Long Beach City College. "I feel," says Fraser, this is a great place, with the nicest people in the world with whom to be associated."

This year also has been a good one for Fraser and the team! LBCC was named Number One Junior College team in California, reaching the finals in the State Junior College Basketball Championships. Last year they compiled a 28-6 won status.

While Betty Fraser, the former BBetty Thomas, probably presides over the kitchen, she, too, is well known in the world of sports. She and Bill met at Wilson High School where she also taught physical education.

While their hobbies may be in the sports realm, their main interests are the four little "Bs," daughters, Blair, 10, Brook, 8, Brynne, 4, and son, Bruce, 9.

WILLIAM (BILL) FRASER

Betty says "Bill's not one bit fussy about things, is a neat cook, especially when preparing French toast for the youngsters and when presiding over the barbecue." Latest addition to the family is a camper-trailer and more outdoor cooking for Dad.

Today, our chef is indoors, putting together a tamale pie.

TAMALE PIE

1 large can corn, drained
1 small can tamales, cut up
1 large can chili with beans
1 can pitted ripe olives
½pound cheddar or Jack cheese, grated
1 8-ounce can tomato sauce
1 bag corn chips

Mis together, saving some cheese and chips for top. Place in casserole and bake, uncovered, 1 hour at 350 degrees. Serves 8.

DEAR ABBY

Vacation should be fun for all

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I can't agree on what constitutes a vacation. Paul and I have four kids, ranging in ages from 10 to 16. Last summer a friend turned over his farm to us and we took the kids and spent three weeks there. Paul is a country boy at heart. He likes to get up at the crack of dawn and run the tractor and spend every evening rocking on the front porch, looking into space and listening to the crickets. Meanwhile, I do all the laundry, cooking and dishes. (This is a vacation?)

Paul wants to go to this farm again, and I say we should leave the kids home and take a real vacation alone somewhere. My mother agreed to stay with our kids. What should I do? Take the credit cards and go to Reno? CITY GIRL

DEAR CITY GIRL: To Reno with credit cards? What for? To gamble or file for a divorce? Why not compromise, and do what Paul wants to do for half the vacation and what you want to do for the other half?

DEAR ABBY: I'm not much of a letter writer, but I need some answers, so here goes:

The other day I got a questionnaire in the mail. It was a form to fill out. There were lots of questions about a friend of mine who apparently had applied for a job with a big company. Here are some of the questions:

Has — ever been in trouble with the law?

Does — drink? Moderately? — Excessively? —

Does — use drugs?

What do you know about — 's general health?

Please name some of — 's undesirable qualities.

Name some of — 's good qualities.

Abby, my friend must have given my name for a reference or I wouldn't have received this questionnaire, right?

I have known this person for about 15 years, but I can't honestly answer some of these questions. In fact, if I could, I wouldn't want to. I'm afraid if I don't fill out this form, my friend won't get the job.

How would you handle this? STUCK

DEAR STRUCK: You are under no obligation to answer the questionnaire. I would write a letter telling what I DO know about the applicant and no more.

More money for the arts?

By ELISE EMERY
Arts Editor

California Arts Commission will meet June 11 at 10:30 a.m. in Monterey to name a chairman and vice chairman for 1974-75 and to discuss commission activities and policies for the coming year.

The commission probably will not be able at this meeting to take action on the matter of greatest interest to art groups in the state, namely, funds available for the year's grants awards.

Last year, 1973-74, the CAC granted $951,000 in awards. Two Long Beach grants were $3,000 to Long Beach Regional Arts Council to stage its just-concluded arts festival and $5,000 to Long Beach Symphony Association for a series of free summer concerts in Los Angeles and Orange counties.

In its new budget, CAC has asked for, and the Assembly Ways and Means Committee has approved, a proposed budget of $2,000,000. However, the Senate Finance Committee has approved a budget of only $1,000,000. This means that if the Senate figure prevails the 1974-75 amount for grants will be about the same as this year instead of approximately double the $951,000.

To resolve the difference between the Assembly and Senate figures, six legislators, three assemblymen and three senators, will be appointed to a Joint Conference Committee and will begin work after the current legislative recess which ends Wednesday.

Although members of this committee have not yet been named, it is expected that Sen. Randolph Collier, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and Assemblyman Willie Brown, chairman of the Assembly Ways and Means Committee, will be members. If the $2,000,000 figure is approved, that amount will go into the overall state budget to be submitted to the governor.

Members of California Arts Commission hope that you will immediately express your views by writing to the governor, Collier, Brown or the senator or assemblyman in whose district you reside. The mailing address to use is State Capitol, Sacramento, Calif. 95814.

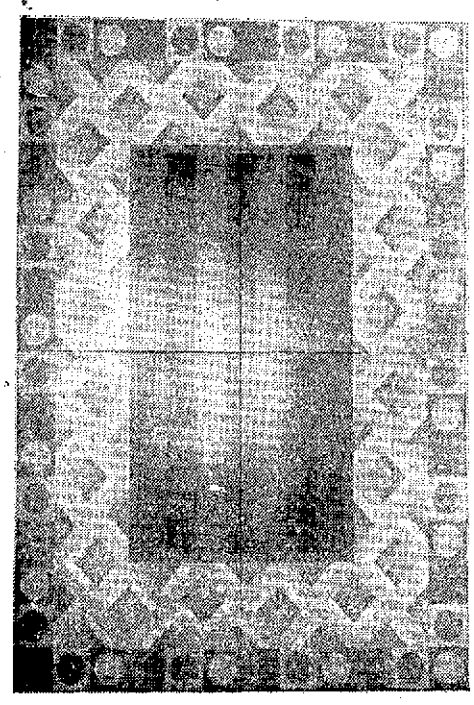

LOS ANGELES County Museum of Art has been given an important early painting by the Ahmanson Foundation. "Holy Family" by Renaissance artist Fra Bartolommeo has been installed on the Plaza level of the Ahmanson Gallery and will remain on view permanently.

Painted shortly before 1500, the picture demonstrates the transition from Fra Bartolommeo's early Renaissance work to his later individual style and illustrates a period in the artist's development. Everett Fahy, director of the Frick Collection, New York, suggests that the tall proportions and canvas support which are relatively unusual for its time, may indicate that the painting was created for a religious event, such as a procession, rather than as an altar piece.

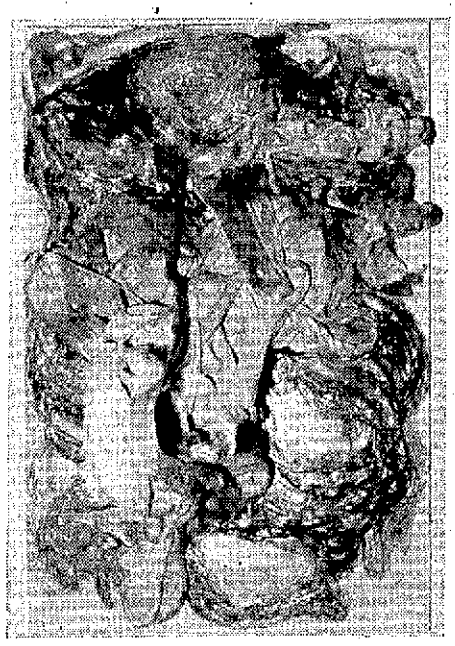

Formerly in the Panciatichi Collection in Florence, the painting most recently was in the collection of Count Alessandro Contini-Bonacossi.

Continuing in the LACMA's Frances and Armand Hammer Wing through June 16 is the exhibition, "Age of the Pharaohs." This is the most comprehensive exhibit of ancient Egyptian art ever presented in California. The museum is located at 5905 Wilshire Blvd.

LIMITED SPACE is available for the Bill Bowne Workshop Monday through Thursday. Organized by the Long Beach Art Association, the workshop will be held in the Long Beach Museum Carriage House, 2300 E. Ocean Blvd. Fee for the four days, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., is $25. Bowne is associate professor of art at California State University, San Diego. For further information call LBAA's special projects chairman Dr. James Benedict, 1130 E. Cabrillo, San Pedro, or LBAA Gallery, 800 E. Ocean Blvd.

HARD EDGE painting 'The Mary Tenny Gray Travel Club Patch' by Lenore Stribley won first prize at Long Beach Art Association's membership exhibition now on view at Long Beach Museum of Art.

VINYL ACRYLIC by Hattie Miller is one of 38 works selected by juror E. J. Velardi Jr. for LBAA show at Long Beach Museum. The prints, paintings and drawings may be seen through June 26. There is no admission fee.

The Long Beach Art Association's 59th annual Membership Exhibition is on exhibit at Long Beach Museum of Art and will continue through June 26.

FRANCOISE GILOT, author of "Life With Picasso" and an artist in her own right, will be guest speaker Monday at 10 a.m. when the Art Museum Council of Los Angeles County Museum of Art holds its general meeting in Bing Auditorium at the museum. Now Mrs. Jonas Salk, Ms. Gilot lived with Picasso for 10 years and was influenced by him and such artists as Chagall, Matisse and Redon.

DALE PECHE, native of Long Beach and resident of Anaheim, has had his painting "Saturday at San Simeon" accepted for the 206th Summer Exhibition of the Royal Academy of Arts in London. This is one of England's largest art shows for which thousands of entries are submitted each year. Selection of works to be shown is made by the Council of the Royal Academy. The exhibit will run through July 28.

Recipient of more than 45 awards, Peche was born in Long Beach in 1928, studied at Long Beach City College and later at the Art Center, Los Angeles.

'HOLY FAMILY' by Fra Bartolommeo, Italian painter (1472-1517), is from artist's transitional period. It is a recent gift to Los Angeles County Museum of Art.

CURT OPLIGER, art coordinator for the City of Los Angeles since 1956, has resigned and will leave that post July 1. He will take a European vacation before starting corrective medical therapy for a progressively deteriorating hearing problem stemming from his World War II experience as a European combat troop transport pilot. During his tenure, he directed and installed more than 500 exhibits in Los Angeles owned art facilities, particularly in the Municipal Art Gallery in Barnsdall Park.

A professional artist, Opliger has exhibited in open national competitions and in museums; he also has produced and directed art films shown extensively in film festivals and art theaters. From 1965 through 1967, he was art critic for Artform magazine.

ARTISTS RESIDING within a 30-mile radius of Los Angeles City Hall are eligible for the colorful annual All City Outdoor Art Festival at Barnsdall Park, Los Angeles, June 28 through 30. More than 2,000 artists are expected to participate and compete for purchase awards totaling $10,000. Prize money is donated by Home Savings and Loan Association; winning entries will be added to that firm's extensive art collection. All entries will be displayed in the Municipal Art Gallery and throughout the 11-acre grounds at Barnsdall Park, 4804 Hollywood Blvd.

The three-day festival, open to the public without charge, will include musical events, demonstrations, a special children's area and the festival's first film forum for experimental short 16 mm films by area film makers. Hours will be from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. daily. Trams will provide transportation from the park entrance to the gallery at the top of the hill.

LONG BEACH'S Studio Trois, 3069 Long Beach Blvd., will have Gunnar Puldas as featured artist for the month of June. He will be greeted at a reception today from 2 to 4 p.m.; the public is invited.

Born in Viljandi, Estonia, 40 years ago, Puldas began his early art studies shortly after World War II in Aschaffenburg, Germany. He came to the United States in 1950, received his degree in engineering in 1958 from Indiana Institute of Technology and has specialized in nuclear power plant design.

BEST KNOWN for his seascapes and paintings of rustic America, Robert Wee will be guest demonstrator for Bellflower Art Association Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in Simms Park Social Hall, 16614 Clark Ave., Bellflower.

INSTALLATION of new officers and a demonstration by its founder and first president will mark the meeting of Traditional Artists Guild of Paramount next Sunday at 2 p.m. in the Community Center Building, Paramount Park, 14410 Paramount Blvd. A reception will follow the demonstration by Nona Taylor.

As her final official duty as president, Mary Lou Bagby will present annual scholarship awards to two Paramount High School graduates. She will be succeeded as president by Viola Logan.

A RECEPTION today at 3 p.m. will honor Ms. Virgil Bienvenu whose one-woman show opens at Garden Grove Artisans Guild, 9858 Garden Grove Blvd. Her work will be shown in Guild Hall during June. The public is invited to meet the artist today and to see her demonstrate her painting technique.

Coward, O'Neill plays scheduled at Ahmanson

The Center Theater Group has announced the first two productions of its four-play eighth subscription season at the Music Center's Ahmanson Theatre and both are durable dramas. "Private Lives" by Noel Coward will run Oct. 8 through Nov. 16; "A Moon for the Misbegotten" by Eugene O'Neill will begin a six-week engagement Nov. 26.

The Coward comedy will star Maggie Smith and John Standing in a production by Arthur Cantor directed by Sir John Gielgud. Gielgud directed the show last season in a London revival. The well-known plot concerns the second love affair between a divorced husband and wife when they meet during their separate second honeymoons at a hotel on the Riviera. This will mark Maggie Smith's third starring role at the Ahmanson Theater. The Academy Award winning actress previously appeared in "The Beaux' Stratagem" and "Three Sisters" with the National Theater Company of Great Britain during its Ahmanson engagement, and four seasons ago she starred in "Design for Living" which was produced at the Ahmanson by its managing director Robert Fryer.

SHE WON the Academy Award for her performance in "The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie" and received an Academy Award nomination for her screen performance in "Travels With My Aunt." Both films were produced by Robert Fryer and James Cresson. On the stage, Miss Smith was a member of the Old Vic Company. Her appearances with the National Theater Company include Desdemona opposite Laurence Olivier in "Othello," "The Master Builder," "Much Ado About Nothing," the title roles in Strindberg's "Miss Julie" and Ibsen's "Hedda Gabler." She received the Evening Standard Drama Award for the Best Actress of 1970 for the latter play which Ingmar Bergman directed.

England's distinguidhed actor John Standing, is a past member of the Bristol Vic Company. He has been starred in numerous television as well as stage productions.

IT IS THE Broadway production of "A Moon for the Misbegotten," starring Jason Robards and Colleen Dewhurst, which will come to the Ahmanson in November. Directed by Jose Quintero, the play won four Tony Awards and since its revival in New York last year has been one of the biggest dramatic hits in recent Broadway history.

This last play that O'Neill wrote is a work of depth and compassion. In it, a hard-drinking, Broadway playboy (Jason Robards) comes to the home of his tenant farmer, a salty, bad-tempered character. He again encounters his tenant's voluptuous and earthy daughter (Colleen Dewhurst) who offers her love to the guilt-laden alcoholic. However, he lacks the capacity to receive or to return it.

THE CAREERS of Robards, Miss Dewhurst and Quintero show an affinity for O'Neill's dramas. Robards came to overnight prominence as Hickey, the salesman in "The Iceman Cometh" at Off-Broadway's Circle in the Square and he made his Broadway debut in "A Long Day's Journey Into Night." For his performance in O'Neill's "Hughie," he received the New York Drama Critics Award. In 1971, he appeared in the Kennedy Center's inaugural production of "The Country Girl" which won acclaim later on Broadway and in Los Angeles.

Colleen Dewhurst first performed her current Broadway role of Josie in the Spoleto Festival production of "A Moon for the Misbegotten," which was directed by Jose Quintero. Later, she appeared in the off-Broadway revival of O'Neill's "Desire Under the Elms," for which she won the Obie Award.

COLLEEN DEWHURST won a Tony Award for best female star in Eugene O'Neill's 'A Moon for the Misbegotten.' The play will be the second in the Los Angeles Center Theater Group's fall series.

LBSU announces opera auditions

Auditions for Long Beach State University's Summer Session Opera Workshop will be held Friday and Monday, June 10, at 7 p.m. in the Choral Room of the Music Building.

The workshop will produce a double bill of one act operas, "The Tenor" by Hugo Weisgall, and "Il Campanello Di Notte" by Gaetano Donizetti July 26 and 27 in the Little Theater on campus. Dr. Hans Lampl will be musical director and conductor; John Noschese will be in charge of staging. Singers trying out will be expected to sing an aria or art song of their choice in any language. An accompanist will be provided.

Enrollment in the summer session is open to all singers and to non-singers who want to participate in production areas. For further information, call Dr. Lampl at the LBSU music department.

MAGGIE SMITH and John Standing will star in Noel Coward's comedy 'Private Lives' to open the Center Theater Group at the Ahmanson's 1974-75 eighth subscription season Oct. 8.

Summer Starlight dates set

The popular, admission-free Starlight Serenades will be played in Recreation Park June 25, July 9 and July 23.

Henry Brandon will be guest conductor for the first program, a pops concert titled "America, Not a Bad Place to Live."

John Head, assistant conductor of the Atlanta Symphony, will direct the July 9 event, an extravaganza. The Gentlemen's Agreement Barbershop Quartet will be featured.

Long Beach Municipal Band directed by Everett Siegrett, and the Long Beach Symphony Orchestra directed by Jack Palacios, associate conductor, will join for the July 23 program.

The Starlight Serenades are made possible, in part, by the California Arts Commission, Recording Industries Music Performance Trust Funds, the City of Long Beach, County of Los Angeles Board of Supervisors Music and Performing Arts Commission and the Independent, Press-Telegram.

The Aces on bridge

TEAM CAPTAIN

Dear Mr. Corn:

We had 60 on score and this was our bidding. I was dropped at five hearts and then was called down for my bidding of the West hand. What bidding do you suggest?

In Dutch
Longmeadow, Mass.

Answer: Your opening bid was marginal since your long suit was clubs and the part score would promote competition. I strongly disapprove of your partner's pass. Given your bidding; East should have bid six clubs which would have had some fair chances.

Dear Mr. Corn:

I would open this hand with a game demand bid of two spades. Would you?

♠ K Q J 10 8
♥ K Q
♣ A K Q 8 2

High Sights
Pittsburgh

Answer: Yes. If partner has a spade fit and no high cards, a spade game is virtually ironclad.

Dear Mr. Corn:

We're always in dispute over game demand bids. I believe that an intervening bid relieves responder of the requirement to bid. If there is no intervening bid then responder is forced for one round. Am I right?

Fifth Verse
New Castle, Ind

Answer: You're right about the intervening bid relieving responder of a forced bid. If responder bids voluntarily he shows some strength. Whether or not the "game demand" is played as unconditionally forcing to game or forcing for one round is a matter for partnership agreement. It can be played either way.

Dear Mr. Corn:

How many people participate as part of an international team competing for a world championship?

Interested Fan
Chicago

Answer: A minimum of four players and a maximum of six (almost always six); a captain, usually a coach.

Foreign travel easy as crossing the street

Crossing the world's friendlest border is as easy as walking across a library to get another book — in fact in one town you can do exactly that.

There's no hassling over passports, no writing away for visas ahead of time. When you cross the Canadian-American border, all you're likely to encounter is a customs official who'll ask where you were born, where you're going, and how long you'll stay.

Then you're off under the 'Welcome to Canada' sign, leaving behind any border-crossing apprehensions you may have had.

LAST YEAR, Americans made a total of 32 million crossings into Canada by road alone. Of the 414 points of admission into Canada, 126 are by highway.

The Canada-U.S. border is unique in the world. With a shared boundary of 5,526 miles on land and water it is the world's longest undefended frontier.

In some places, international travel is sometimes accidental, and incidental to day-to-day living. The towns of Rock Island, Quebec, and Derby Line, Vermont, for instance, together form the closest thing to an international town in the two countries.

If you go to the library to borrow a book there, you may cross the border just looking for it inside the building. In the 450-seat theater, actors speak onstage in Canada, to an audience mainly in the United States.

And in at least one instance, a doctor had to testify as to the location of the bed in a house straddling the line, in order to determine the nationality of a baby he had delivered. To avoid confusion, new buildings are now prohibited from coming within 10 feet of the border.

BORDER-CROSSING regulations, of course, do exist, and it's advisable to have on hand documents proving citizenship or permanent residence — just in case you're asked.

A native-born American citizen needs only some identifying paper such as a birth, baptismal or voter's certificate showing his citizenship.

Naturalized U.S. citizens should have their naturalization certificate or other proof of citizenship. Permanent residents of the United States who are not American citizens are advised to have their Alien Registration Receipt Card (U.S. Form I-151).

Persons under 18 years of age who are not accompanied by an adult should bring a letter with them from a parent or guardian giving them permission to travel into Canada. Anyone crossing must have enough money for the time spent in Canada.

There is no problem with bringing vehicles and trailers into the country. If you're driving someone else's car, you should carry a letter from the registered owner authorizing use of the vehicle. Driver's licenses from all states of the U.S.A. and from other countries are valid in Canada, as are International Driver's Licenses.

It is also advisable to carry a Canadian Non-Resident Interprovince Motor Vehicle Liability Insurance Card, available only in the United States from your own insurer.

YOU'LL PROBABLY never be asked for proof of birth or citizenship or need any other of the documents, but it's a good idea to have them with you — just in case.

The usual routine at the border is a friendly "where were you born, where are you going — and have a good time."

It's when you come back that the tricky questions are asked by U.S. customs like: "How long have you been gone and have you anything to declare."

But that's done in an equally friendly fashion and a stopover for a minute at the U.S. customs on your way through will get you information you'll need on what you can bring back.

Some people may like to take along the family pet. There are no restrictions on bringing cats into the country. To bring a dog into Canada you must have a licensed veterinarian's certificate stating that the dog has been vaccinated against rabies in the past 12 months.

If you're thinking of flying into Canada either by scheduled airline or private plane, there are 138 air entries into the country. Duty-free shops are located in international airports and marine terminals for those returning to the U.S. by air or boat.

TRAVELING WITH DELAPLANE

Suva wet all over

By STAN DELAPLANE

Suva, Fiji

A rainy morning in Suva. Not unusual — Suva gets 180 inches a year. On these days, matches won't strike. Carbon paper curls into tubes. Air mail paper goes in the typewriter damp enough to wring water out.

A coconut capital of the cannibal islands, Suva is on the wet side. That's why the airport is at Nadi, 120 miles away on the dry side. Today parts of the Queen's Road between is under twenty feet of water.

A wonderful South Pacific town, right out of Somerset Maugham. Shacky wooden buildings with overhang balconies. A chatty open air market. Baskets of fish. Squirming fresh shrimp in boxes of woven green coconut fronds.

Red bananas. Ginger. Tiny green tomatoes. Bitter melon. Yams and papayas and fresh pineapples.

You are 5,600 miles from San Francisco, about 2,000 from Sydney. Quantas the Australian airline, pushing for mastery of the South Pacific, flew us down and this is one of the stopovers you can make. It's worth it. Don't overfly Fiji.

Fiji is all free port. East Indians imported to work sugar cane have graduated to shopkeeping. Half of them seem to have gone into tailoring. The others sell Japanese radios and cameras and French perfumes.

Prices are good but you MUST BARGAIN! The asking price is just to open the conversation.

Victoria Parade, tree-shaded, built by the British Governors, is the line of march for the Police and the Defense Forces Bands. Big chocolate Fijians in uniform tunics and white wraparound sulu skirts.

The music is magnificent. They parade on every occasion.

On Boat Days, the fire walkers come over from the misty island of Beqa. March barefoot over fire pits that would char a steak. Come out unblistered.

Hotels are just so-so. Best in Suva is the new Travelodge. At the other end of the island, the Fijian is tropical and plush.

Tropical fruits are exotic and fragrant. Fish is fresh. But when Fiji gets into Western food, it filters from England to New Zealand and Australia, getting more dismal every sea mile. If I were running Fiji, I'd import a lot of cooks from Hong Kong.

"Is it true you lose a day going down to Australia?"

Yes, but you make it up on the way back. I had a birthday in Fiji. Left that night and had another birthday in Honolulu.

The International Dateline runs through Fiji and that's where the world's new day begins. When it's noon in Fiji, it's 4 p.m. the day before on the American West Coast.

The dateline has been bent around the Fiji group. All islands are now on the same day. At one time, the dateline ran right through Taveuni. They say a pub keeper on the dateline beat the Sunday closing laws by serving beer out the back door — where it was Saturday. And when it became Sunday, he served out the front door where it was now Monday.

travel

"We are taking our children, two and four, to Mexico. What is your opinion of the safety of milk? Ice cream? Swimming pools?"

I kept my children off ice cream and milk at that age. Swimming pools in the big hotels are full of chlorine. (And how can you keep kids OUT of swimming pools?) At home I washed salad things in a mild antiseptic solution. My children have never been sick in Mexico.

"Do you think there are particularly unsafe places — from a health standpoint?"

In small towns -- where they have the colorful, old-time markets — I'm careful. I stay on bottled water. Lay off the salads. It seems a matter of chance. I never get sick in Mexico. I had a fearful few days of dysentery in Hong Kong once. And I picked up food poisoning on the Left Bank in Paris. Not a bad track record.

Well-traveled doctor says: "Wash your hands as often as you get a chance. And keep your hands away from your face."

Trekking by wagon train, sightseeing by bus, car

A wagon train trek in Wyoming and a weekend at the Waldorf are just two of nearly 100 vacation packages created by Trans World Airlines for its 1974 Getaway Adventures U.S.A. program.

The range of choices covers the country from coast to coast and beyond to Hawaii. The tours are divided into two categories: Great Cities and Great Outdoors.

A new feature this year is the TWA Freewheeler plan. For a fixed daily rate, the traveler is offered a car with unlimited mileage, hotel accommodations every nite, and discount coupons for sightseeing, shopping and some meals. Price averages about $16 a day per person for a party of two.

The airline also offers a large variety of fly/drive packages which provide for a specific number of rental car days and hotel nights. For example, one package includes a night in Los Angeles, a night in San Francisco, and a rental car for seven days with unlimited mileage. The cost ranges from $69 to $84 a person, double occupancy, depending on hotels selected.

Longer motorcoach itineraries are available. A two-week tour of the West covers San Francisco, Yosemite National Park, Monterey Peninsula, Santa Maria, Las Vegas and Phoenix-Scottsdale. The cost: from $362 to $432 a person.

Many single-city packages, such as those to Boston and Washington, D.C., offer sightseeing options in the city and surrounding areas.

A good example of a Great Outdoors tour is the four-day wagon train trip into the Grand Teton country of Wyoming. Priced at $180 a person, it includes transfers between airport and wagon train, bedroll, camping gear, chuckwagon meals and cowboy guides.

The person who wants to get closer to nature can also climb mountains, shoot river rapids, ride horses, or backpack into scenic areas of the West. For the less adventuresome, there are tours centering on western resorts and ranches.

Destinations featured in Great Cities' tours are San Francisco, Las Vegas, Chicago, New York, Washington, D.C. and environs. Boston and New England, and Philadelphia-Baltimore.

Each tour is covered by TWA's Getaway Adventures Tour Warranty which certifies that an appropriate refund will be made if any tour element or service is not delivered as described in the brochure.

The tours are detailed in TWA's 97-page, four-color Getaway Adventures U.S.A. '74 brochure, available free from travel agents or any TWA sales office.

Nature buffs pack light, run fast

By HERB SHANNON
I,P-T Travel Editor

Nothing to wear for your vacation trip this year? Forget it. Just come as you are.

The naked truth is that this may not be altogether a new idea, as our gal Choral Pepper explains on another page of this section in her column on the nubile nymphs of yesteryear in the forests of France.

But the garment trades are getting the needle from nudists all over again these days. A jaybird gentleman won first prize in the traditional masked ball last night out on a recent cruise aboard P&O's Spirit of London, and a couple dozen beach resorts in Yugoslavia are specializing in suntans all over.

THE PROBLEM for officers in charge of P&O's funship event was that their prizewinning performer didn't stay out of costume long enough to collect his award on the return to Los Angeles from the Mexican party cruise. He vanished into the crowd as fast as he had become totally vis-

"We couldn't identify him among 300 costumed men on board," confessed Capt. John A. P. Crichton, skipper of the ship. "Every man was a suspect except, of course, the captain."

Capt. Crichton is always in costume. He wears a full beard in the best British naval tradition.

MEANWHILE, tourists from Scandinavia, Switzerland, Germany, Belgium, Holland, France and chilly Britain are streaking for the Adriatic sunshine. They find Yugoslavia's climate ideal for letting it all hang out.

It's only logical that the Adriatic coast should be the nature-lover's favorite seashore. The Island of Rab will soon celebrate the golden anniversary of its nudist beach, and it was here that Britain's King Edward VIII dropped his trunks for a swim about the time he dropped his crown for the woman he loved. There is no record that Mrs. Simpson joined him in the 1936 skinnydip.

Happy hunting ground for what some might consider an X-rated holiday is the Adriatic side of the Istrian peninsula, where nudie resort colonies stud the seaside among romantic settlements reaching back to Roman times. Among them are Koversada, where the World Naturist Organization held its convention last year, Solaris, Valalta and Medulin.

THE ISTRIAN resorts offer every amenity, including bars, night clubs, marinas, sports centers and freedom to do your own show and tell thing. There are also family facilities for nudists who prefer to get back to nature in other ways. They pitch tents, bring their own boats and spend their holidays in piney woods reaching to the sea.

The vacation au naturelle is not limited to Europeans. More and more Americans are discovering the uninhibited beaches of the Adriatic through inexpensive charter tours and all-inclusive Yugoslavian holiday package plans. One tour operator offering these through travel agents is Sunbathers International, 342 Madison Ave., N.Y., N.Y. 10017.

THE IDEA is to pack light, with just enough to wear to keep from being arrested on the way over and back. Once checked into the resort of your choice, send your clothes to the closet or the cleaners.

Other Adriatic areas set aside for members of the stationary streakers set are strategically located in scenic seclusion on the islands of Krk, Cres, Mali Losinj, Pag, Silba, Dugi Otek, Brac and Hvar. The only trouble is you may not be able to find all these places.

You won't have a pocket for your pronouncing dictionary.

Chenonceau: where streaking got its start

travel

By CHORAL PEPPER

Once upon a time I'm sure that I lived in a castle. I explore them in Europe like an old soldier relishing historic battlegrounds, walking along with my vibes hanging out hoping for a sign that this is "the one."

As yet I haven't found my other-life Camelot, but when we approached the sun-dappled path leading to the drawbridge of Chenonceau, I thought for one fleeting instant this was it. I could be very happy living here, even today.

Located in Loire Valley on the River Cher in the heart of France, Chateau de Chenonceau is the warmest castle I have seen. Sometimes called "The Chateau of Six Women," its history evolved around so many emancipated ladies that it could be conceived as a progenitor of Women's Lib.

FIRST CAME Catherine Briconnet, the 16th century builder. Her husband was so busy fighting battles in Italy that he left all the decisions to her. As a result, Catherine designed the first chateau in France with a practical consideration for housekeeping and liveability.

She placed rooms on each side of a central vestibule to make service easier and she inaugurated a straight staircase, better suited to receptions than the traditional spiral of the period.

Catherine died 12 years after the castle was begun, following her husband by two years. They had little time to enjoy their creation, but they did leave a legacy. Engraved on a Renaissance fireplace in the Francis I room is a motto entwined with their initials.

It reads "S'il vient a point me souviendra," which means, "If I succeed in building the castle, I shall be remembered." They must have died happy.

They also died financially over-extended. Their son gave Chenonceau to King Francois I in payment for large debts incurred by his father to the Crown.

IN 1547 when Henry II ascended to the thorne, he presented Chenonceau to his mistress, Diane de Pointiers. Even though she was a widow and 20 years his senior, she had a firm hold on his affections.

Her portrait in the Frances I room depicts a ravishing beauty with uncommonly fair skin and very black eyes. It was said that she never wore "paint," and was as beautiful when she died at age 67 as she was at 30.

No doubt her sense of style was as flamboyant as her beauty. She wore only the black and white of mourning, less as a sign of devotion than as a vehicle to emphasize her spectacular coloring. The effect was so contagious that the King voluntarily confined his wardrobe to mourning colors also, much to the irritation of Catherine de Medici, his wife.

While Diane was known as the "Ever-Beautiful," Catherine the Queen was known as "The Magnificent." Immediately upon Henry's death, the Magnificent evicted the Ever-Beautiful and sought revenge by moving her to a grim 15th century feudal fortress with little charm.

As Regent, Catherine then set about establishing a social identity of her own, focusing the action on Chenonceau.

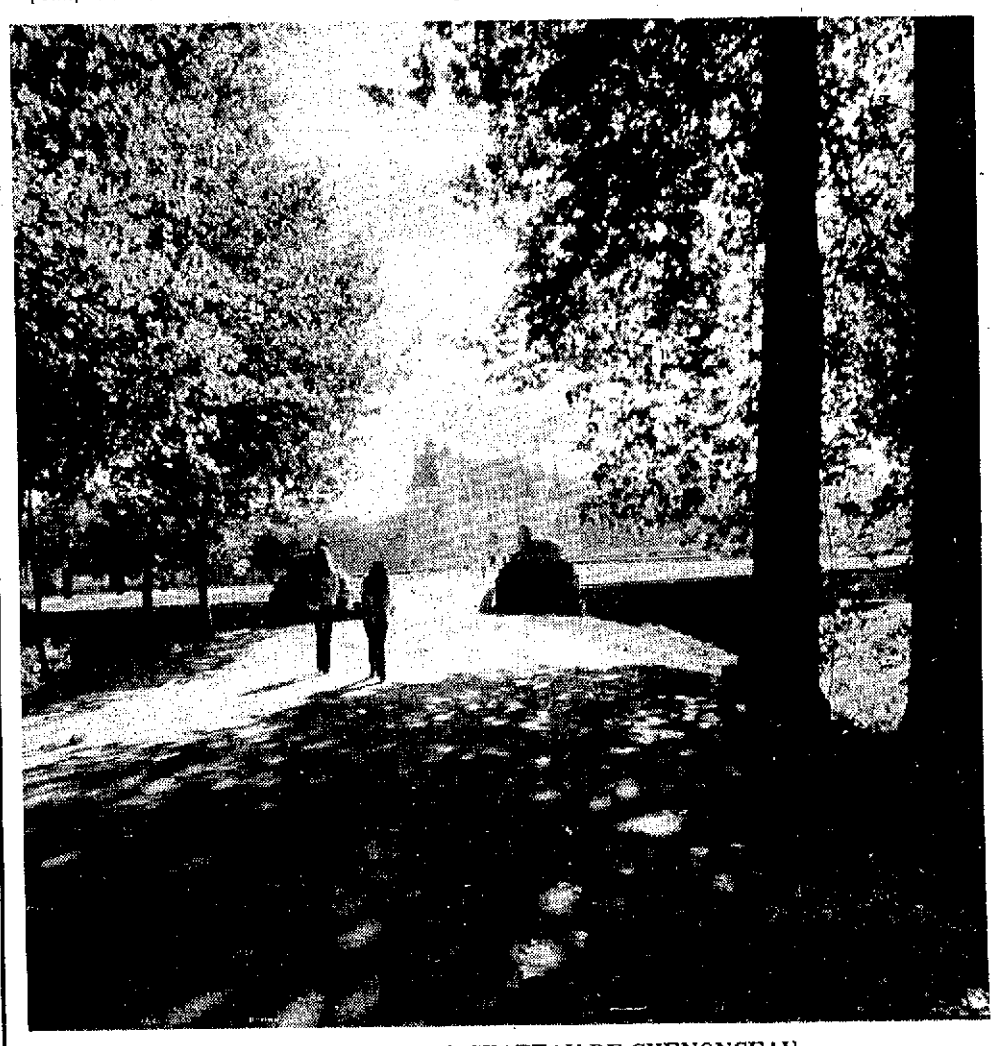

Parties during her tenure were more illustrious than those of Playboy Hugh Hefner's today. Instead of Bunnies, Catherine celebrated her son's homecomings with topless ladies of the court darting through the gardens pursued by noble satyrs To honor Francois II and Mary Stuart, she installed a chorus of eligible maidens disguised as mermaids in the castle moats while barebreasted nymphs emerged from thickets along the avenue to the chateau.

Thats when I decided that Chenonceau was never mine. Even in another incarnation, I would never have made it as a nymph.

FESTIVITIES came to an inglorious end at the turn of the 16th century when her son, Henry III, was assassinated. Catherine then bequeathed Chenonceau to his widow, Louise of Lorraine, who restored the black and white of mourning.

Unlike Diane, this lady took it seriously. Her bedroom, bed, carpets, chairs and draperies were of black damask or velvet and crowns of thorns were painted in white on black ceilings.

For 11 years she divided her time between prayer, needlework and reading. Her room was destroyed later, but the inlaid ceiling was saved and installed in a section of the 65-foot-long gallery that spans the Cher River.

PENNYWISE TRAVELER

Avoiding point-to-point fares

travel

By JANE MORSE

I was born to fly too but not at point-to-point fares.

Point-to-point fares are the ones they wallop you with when, as a virtuous vacationer, you abandon plans to see the U.S.A. in your Chevrolet and try to do it by plane with one or preferably more stopovers.

What a blow! Suddenly the discounts and the deals dry up, and you're cordially invited to choose between first-class or economy fares from one place to another, then add them up for a genuinely grand total.

Okay, but what anti-stopover rules do, the average, determined-to-see-America passenger should be able to undo. You, too, can beat the system.

HERE'S HOW it works today. Bear in mind that tomorrow or the day after, things could be different. Airline rules and prices come and go faster than nighttime burglars, and what one carrier allows, another may disallow.

THE LITTLE BIT LATE CAPER — This gets you the most limited kind of stopover around but, never mind, it could be good for a quick visit to your long-lost cousins in Carrymeback or Okeefeenofee. What you have to do is look very carefully into routings and connections.

You're allowed a maximum of four hours between two flights normally, but careful planning and a little luck can permit you the abnormal: a big, fun-filled overnight stay. All you do is book a plane that arrives after your last possible connecting flight has flown.

FUNNY FARES — Open jaws, circles, dog legs and triangles are what they call them in the trade. In real life they are weird routings and extensions invented to fill up planes that might otherwise go emptier. Between central cities on both coasts, for example, there are routings that take you via Miami or allow you to arrive at one city but leave from another. Between Los Angeles and Alaska are routings that let you drop down in Hawaii. Between Minneapolis and Seattle are routings that go by way of San Diego.

IN MOST CASES these extra-mileage whizbangs allow one or more free or low-cost stopovers that beat point-to-point fares to the same places by a country mile.

PIGGYBACK ARRANGEMENTS — No one is allowed to sell two or more airline tickets for what is essentially one trip. Okay, but nothing says you can't buy them this way, and sometimes you'd be twice a fool not to make the two trips to a travel agent or two calls necessary to do it.

Two round-trip discount fare tickets, one between Cee and Dee and another between Dee and Zee, give you two free stopovers in Dee. They also undercut regular coach point-to-point fares, and generally come close to matching direct Cee-to-Zee discount fares.

THE LAST TANGO? Inclusive Tour Excursion (ITX) fares may or may not linger much longer at their sweet old variable discounts of 20% to 40% off regular coach fares, but where they do, they'll be worth your attention. They're the home of the $5 and $10 stopover.

NOT ALL airlines have them, weekend travel may be a no-no, 21 or 30 days may be the maximum travel time allowed, tour packages are always a required extra. Even so, between two points covered by an ITX fare, you can usually pick any city on your airline's route and pay the small extra price to drop in.

You don't even have to travel in a straight line. Most companies in on this act have some zigzag routings. Coast to coast, for instance, you can sample a $10 stop in Chicago and then zoom down for a $10 stop in Dallas.

Ah, but do not innocently ask where you can stop on an ITX fare. That'll throw whomever you're talking to from here to Antarctica. Go in person to your travel agent or an airline office and speak backward — that is, tell them what you want to do, then wait for them to tell you what you can do.

First, name the most distant place you want to go, then ask if there's an ITX fare and what sort of tour you'll have to buy to qualify for it. Tours that make you eligible generally must include at least two nights' lodging and one other thing — most often a rental car or some sightseeing — and meet a certain minimum price.

If things still look promising, then name stopovers you'd like en route. Cities that aren't on one carrier's list may be on another's, so shop until you're satisfied.

California's most popular Caribbean cruises sail from Miami.

We flew more than 25,000 Californians to Miami for cruises last year. People who know a value when they see it. Here's what they saw:

Price. You pay only a little more than if you started your cruise in Miami. But you start it in Los Angeles. On a World Airways 747 charter jet.

Our low price includes round-trip jet fare to Miami. All transportation taxes, port taxes and airport transfers in Miami. And your choice of the Caribbean's most popular 7- and 14-day cruise ships: Song of Norway, Nordic Prince and Sun Viking.

Simplicity. Taking a Royal Caribbean air/sea cruise is easier than going to Duluth to see Aunt Ethel.

Sit down with your travel agent and pick a Friday evening. When it comes, board a sleek World Airways jet at Los Angeles International, fly to Miami, hop in a limousine that whisks you away to the ship.

New ships. Our oldest ship is only two years old. All three were designed specifically for Caribbean cruising.

Which means almost an acre of sundeck, a big pool, saunas, dining rooms and lounges inspired by hit Broadway musicals. It also means the unique Viking Crown Lounge—a cocktail lounge ten stories in the sky. No other ships in the world have anything quite like it.

The places most people want to go.

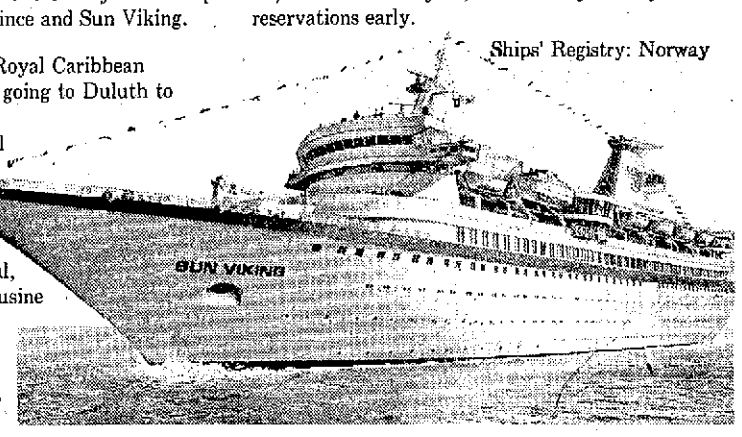

If you've got two weeks, the Nordic Prince sails to San Juan, St. Thomas, plus Martinique, Curaçao, Caracas, Aruba, Port Antonio and Port-au-Prince. While the Sun Viking sails to Grenada, Barbados, Caracas, Curacao, St. Thomas, Port-au-Prince, Guadeloupe and San Juan. Nice choice, nice price. From $800 to $1,310.*

If you've only got a week, you can sail on the elegant Song of Norway to Nassau, San Juan and St. Thomas. You pay from $475 to $745.*

Ask your travel agent. Ask him if this is the Caribbean's best cruise value. He'll probably say yes.

Since over 25,000 Californians took our air/sea cruises last year, he'll also say make your reservations early.

Cruising the Canal in grand style

ROYAL VIKING STAR ENTERING WILLEMSTAD

Time was, a trip through the Panama Canal suggested banana boats, steaming jungles and small bands of intrepid travelers determined to reach a distant port in faraway South America, or even points beyond.

Today things are very different, as the 3,586 Royal Viking Line passengers who have transited the Canal since the Line's maiden cruise in 1972 can attest.

The romance and adventure are still very much a part of this passage, but now the seasoned traveler is much more likely to cruise in comfort aboard one of these vessels, which are designed for smooth sailing and elegance.

On the Norwegian-flag Royal Viking ships, passengers have a front-row seat for the passage, in a choice of air-conditioned lounges. Equally available are prime positions on decks that offer a splendid vantage point from many levels.

THE PASSAGE is absorbing. During eight hours, ships are towed 50 miles down the length of the Canal, thereby saving 7,873 miles between the east and west coasts of the United States, not to mention the hazards of travel around infamous Cape Horn.

The ship proceeds through three series of locks. Ships entering from the Atlantic side (Cristobal) are raised, while those entering on the Pacific side (Balboa) are lowered. During the course of passage, a 22,000-ton Royal Viking Line ship will be raised 85 feet without perceptible motion or disturbance.

The water required to operate these locks is stored in Gatun Lake and Madden Dam during the long rainy seasons typical of this tropical climate. Each lock chamber holds about 66 million gallons of water. About 26 million gallons (a one-day supply for a large city) are used in each lockage, and about twice the amount flows out to sea during each ship transit.

LOOKING UP as the ship enters the lock, passengers have the impression of being in a huge, roofless cavern. Slowly, the ship will rise on its water elevator until it is level with the lock just ahead. It then passes through the gates to be raised yet another level. The process is repeated through the series of locks.

The ship is towed by 55-ton towing locomotives called mules, which are capable of exerting 70,000 pounds of pull or braking power. Royal Viking Line ships use six mules for the passage, three on either side of the ship.

Ports of call for Royal Viking Line Trans-Canal cruises include Caribbean islands and resorts of Mexico. Individual cruises have slightly varied routes and include such ports as Cartagena, Montego Bay, Port-au-Prince, Nassau, Curacao, San Juan, St. Thomas, Acapulco, Puerto Vallarta, Mazatlan, Fly/cruise combinations are available, and passengers may also cruise round-trip from either coast.

Royal Viking Line offers five Trans-Canal cruises in 1974. For 1975, approximately 8,000 passengers will sail with Royal Viking Line on 16 Trans-Canal cruises, originating from both coasts.

Royal Viking Line sisterships offer all-first-class accommodations for approximately 500 people.

Starting July 7, you can enjoy a clever alternative to the traditional Hawaiian vacation.

It's the brand-new Club Méditerranée/Hanalei Plantation on Kauai.

One of the most beautiful locations in the Islands, the Hanalei Plantation was the setting for the film "South Pacific."

Enjoy the low, all-inclusive price. The barefoot, carefree ambience. The glorious meals with wine at lunch and dinner. The sailing, snorkelling, waterskiing that don't cost extra. If you want to get the most for your money, this is your kind of vacation.

Three out of four people who go to Club Méditerranée go because their friends did. It could be the clever alternative for you, too.

Fly there on one of Western's "Islander" jets with First Class Legspace for every passenger and complimentary Champagne for adults.

Buckle up for green belts

THIS IS NOT a good year for bank balances, bond issues and political elections.

Just when Mr. Nelson out on Stevely Avenue has admonished me (May 19 column) to "get off the taxpayer's back" and quit beating the drums for a more beautiful city...

When inflation has us feeling out of cash and Watergate has us out of sorts...

Californians are being asked to pass a bond issue of $250 million for parks, beaches, recreational areas, historical restoration and wildlife conservation. In other words, the greening of California.

A yes vote would send $160 million to the state park system and $90 million to city and county governments for greening according to local decisions.

IT ALL COMES under the heading of Proposition 1 and for my money—which, like everybody else's, is tighter than a rubber band around a sponge—it is the No. 1 issue on the June ballot—along with Proposition 5, which would allow highway taxes to be used for mass transit.

If both are passed, we would be able to de-cement a lot of parking lots, apply green bandages to some of our scars and save threatened beaches and wilderness areas from the bulldozer before it is too late.

In this state, where brutal destruction of the landscape was supposedly born, we have at last taken inventory of our dwindling open space. We are rich in weather and lacking in plases to enjoy it. Californians for Parks,Beaches and Wildlife, the citizens' committee supporting Proposition 1, point out that in the past 20myears California's population has doubled. But the use of parks, beaches and other recreational facilities has multiplied 10 times.

NEARLY a million people were turned away from state park facilities last year.

Those lucky enough to land a campsite found their vacationland often a congested blur of tents, laundry lines and aluminum campers. It's difficult these days to get away from it all.

Housing costs and land prices have changed our lifestyle, making the once-ubiquitous California ranch house a rarity. More and more urbanites are living in condominiums and multiple units, without a lawn to call their own.

The energy crisis and gasoline price hikes also emphasize the need for putting parks close to urban doorsteps so foot power and pedal power can serve as a recreational alternative to the automobile.

This is particularly true in Long Beach's central area, where senior citizens no longer can enjoy their patch of sun in Lincoln Park and have been separated from the ocean by landfills, bridges and ribbons of cement that provide mechanical mobility but do not allow for strolls on the beach.

I RECEIVED just such a plantive reflection from Wayne P. Lewis, who lives on Ocean in an apartment downtown.

"We need a park and tennis courts downtown," he wrote. "I am a senior citizen and like to play tennis—but it is almost impossible to get to or on the courts at Recreation Park." Any tennis buff who's cooled his racket there the past few weeks waiting for a game knows the problem.

However, the particular urban priorities are less important than the general pressures for saving the beaches, wildlife preserves and open land around the population centers.

But cities, counties and the state a e powerless to acquire private lands without the necessary legislation and funding.

This is a particularly critical problem in the administration of Proposition 20, the initiative passed a couple years ago to preserve our coastline. Private developers have been restricted from development through actions by the coastal commission but the state does not have funds to acquire the land.

The pressures are so extreme that Proposition 1 has bi-partisan support, from the governor, both legislative houses, business and labor, local governments, education and historical groups. Passage would no doubt be assured if Californians were enjoying their usual crop of optimism this spring.

But we must plan today for greener tomorrows: The cost to each Californian is estimated at less than $1 a year. That's a cheap price to pay for survival.

A geographical analysis of murder

By LARRY LYNCH
Staff Writer

Cambridge statisticians have predicted, conservatively they say, that one of every 50 U.S. citizens born this year will die as a homicide victim. And if the homicide rate keeps going up as it has been, the ratio will be worse.

A close look at homicide patterns in this area suggests further that the likelihood one or another of us might end up murdered depends on the place in which we live.

Murder has geographical patterns, related in large part to ethnic factors.

In this area in 1973 there was also an unusual circumstance, most likely an aberration, that showed up in the geography of murder. Victims of senseless, unsolved slayings tended to turn up at the intersection of Wilmington Avenue and Victoria Street on the border of Carson and Compton.

Three young persons were gunned down near that intersection by a shadowy assailant whose car forced theirs to the side of the road. Three other bodies of young persons were dumped at the location within a few months. One victim was a chemistry assistant at UCLA whose remains were mutilated in a way that has caused investigators to link his slaying to 79 others statewide, a linking that some think is tied to the Zebra shootings in San Francisco.

Such senseless and unsolved slayings are unusual. Most homicide victims are acquainted with the person who kills them. And many are not the victims of what is finally judged to be murder.

In eight area cities policed by the Los Angeles County sheriff's department (Artesia, Bellflower, Carson, Cerritos, Hawaiian Gardens, Lakewood, Norwalk and Paramount) there were 27 homicides during 1973. Nine of the victims were killed in incidents subsequently discounted as murder, or may yet be. Self-defense rulings are the most common reason. In one case, a murder trial ended in a hung jury; accused were two off-duty sheriff's deputies and a security guard involved in a shooting outside a Lakewood bar.

During the last 12 months tallied officially by the sheriff's department, through June 1973, 84 of the department's 197 homicides occurred in its Firestone station area. With 12 per cent of the department's citizen population, the Firestone station area had 40 per cent of the homicides. Much of the population of the area is black, occupying unincorporated county territory adjacent to South Central Los Angeles.

Carson, a predominantly white city, also is policed from the Firestone station. In 1970, the census recorded the black population of Carson at 11 per cent. In 1973, three of the city's 13 homicide victims were black; two were judged victims of self-defense slayings.

Rarely does murder cross racial or cultural lines. In this area — as has often been reported nationally — fatal violence involving blacks of Mexican Americans is almost always inflicted on members of the same race or culture. In the eight cities examined closely, not one of the homicides in 1973 crossed this line — at least in any case where the suspect has been identified.

The sensational, unsolved murders all involved white victims:

Robert James Loudon, 29, of 103 N. Ardmore Ave., Los Angeles, was last seen one Friday afternoon in May by some of his students at UCLA, where he taught chemistry. The next day his headless body was found dumped in the vacant fields near the Victoria-Wilmington intersection.

All four corners of that intersection are open land, interrupted only by an occasional oil well, storage tank or unpaved trail.

One Saturday night in October, Carl Widman, a 20-year-old from north Long Beach, a black friend and the black youth's girlfriend were gunned down in and near Widman's car at that location. The three were accompanied by a white girl who escaped. At the time they were headed from a drive-in theater in Paramount toward the homes of the black couple, Waverly Cotton, 22, and Elizabeth Shephard, 16, who lived in a middle-class housing tract about a mile southwest.

The white girl told acquaintances another car forced Widman's off the road. Then a man approach-

Blind children race sailboats

By KRIS SHERMAN
Staff Writer

As the sleek, 25-foot sailboat bent towards the water while negotiating a turn, the firm, young hand on the tiller kept the craft on a straight course for the regatta finish line.

Wind was about 25 knots, the sea choppy. Not sailing weather for sissies, not even for novice sailors.

But the firm, young hand at the helm bged to 9-year-old Kara Southwick, of Fountain Valley, who literally was sailing blind. And by all accounts, doing a good job of it.

Kara, a captivating little blonde is one of 24 legally blind children who participated Saturday in the "White Cane Mutiny," a miniature regatta sponsored by the Seal Beach Yacht Club.

THE RULES WERE simple. The boat owners, members of the club, were allowed to give verbal instruction and an occasional hand to the day's skippers, all of whom were students at the Orange County Branch of the Braille Institute of America.

The blind children, ranging in age from 9 to 20, did the actual sailing.

"I know it sounds like kind of a crazy idea," said yacht club Junior Staff Commodore Zollie Byrd, who arranged the unique "mutiny."

"But when you think about it," he continued, "all sailors can sail blind simply by feeling the wind on your face and the tiller in your hand. So, I thought why not take some blind children out and get them involved in the joys of sailing?"

So, Saturday, Byrd and his fellow members of the Seal Beach Yacht Clubdid just that.

Sloop owner John Shelley arranged for the use of 14 Coronado 25-foot boats through Fleet 5 of the Coronado Association.

SINCE ALL the boats in the race were alike, there was no need to handicap the teams, Byrd explained. Each team consisted of two children, a member of the yacht club and a crew member.

The race course, a three-mile expanse of ocean just outside of Alamitos Bay, was laid out especially for the children, Byrd said.

"The object is for the boat owner to give the kids verbal instruction, but the kids have to do some of the work, too," he explained. "They have to listen for the course markers, and we've picked things that make noise as the markers."

Byrd said, for instance, "one of the markers is a large oil platform, so the kids will know they're near it when they hear the 'ba-boom, ba-boom' of the oil rigs.

"One of the most difficult things in a program like this," Byrd continued, "is going to be for the racing skippers to remove themselves from the race.They can't help but want to put their hands on the tiller and help win the race."

NEVERTHELESS, the instructions over, the race begun, the yacht club members stuck to their "hands-off" rule.

As the boats sailed almost in unison across the starting line, yacht club founder Ray Boeger remarked, "Hey, you know that's a pretty darn good start; I've seen a lot worse from people who can see."

As the craft began tacking the course—zig-zagging into the wind—Byrd observed, "They're (the club members) doing the right thing. They're letting the kids sail the boats."

Throughout the 45-minute race, Byrd and Boeger, observing the action from a power boat, said they could not believe how smoothly some of the kids were steering.

And on the sailboats themselves, the young skippers were all smiles. Kara and Alex Valdez, 19, sailed aboard Shelley's boat "Lois."

As one handled the tiller, the other took care of the ropes and winch, moving the sail from side to side as necessary.

"All I did was talk," said one boat owner, "the kids did the rest."

Nixon urged to obey court

By WALT MURRAY
Staff Writer

President Nixon should issue an "immediate and unequivocal statement" that he will obey the Supreme Court if it rules that he must turn over White House tapes subpoenaed by Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski, Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said at Long Beach State University Saturday.

Cranston, who spoke at the humanities and natural sciences graduation cermony at LBSU, also called for "completely open" proceedings with full press coverage in the impeachment hearings.

Nixon should "declare inoperative" an earlier statement that he would turn over tapes only with a "definitive order" from the SupremeCourt, Cranston said.

"No citizen is above the law, including—I should say especially —the President of the United States," Cranston said. "President Nixon should state clearly, and without any qualification, that he will comply with a decision by the highest court of the land, whatever decision that may be."

"He should make such a statement now, before the court acts."

Cranston said that, unless Nixon made his compliance perfectly clear, a struggle between the Supreme Court and Nixon could lead to "a constitutional crisis of monumental proportions."

"He has already exposed himself to a possible charge of contempt of Congress by refusing to turn over tapes and other evidence subpoened by the House Judiciary Committee in its impeachment inquiry," Cranston said. "It would be a terrible thing for our country if the President were to be in contempt of Supreme Court as well."

The senator said he wasn't questioning Nixon's legal right to appeal the special prosecutor's subpoena through the courts.

Jaworski's subpoena for tapes of 46 meetings and phone conversations has been upheld by Federal District Court Judge John Sirica. Jaworski has asked the Supreme Court for an immediate ruling, but Nixon's attorney said Thursday he wants the case heard first by the District of Columbia federal court of appeals.

Cranston, noting that recent surveys had shown students increasingly cynical about the democratic process, said Vietnam and Watergate were the cause of the cynicism.

"In 1964, a Democrat won pledging peace; in 1968 a Republican won pledging peace," he said. "But peace didn't come until 1973 and still hasn't come for the people of Southeast Asia."

What peace there is came only when Congress "lost patience and cut off funds for the shameful bombing of Cambodia," Cranston said.

"Now Watergate has replaced Vietnam as a symbol of what's wrong in American society."

Cranston spoke at one of seven LBSU commencement ceremonies spread over the weekend. The final graduation exercise will be at 4 p.m. today in LBSU's central quad, where Long Beach City Councilwoman Renee Simon will speak.

'Ports getting cleaner'

All agencies toughen ocean oil spill policy

By CHARLES SUTTON
Staff Writer

Federal, state and local agencies appear to be taking an increasingly vigilant approach toward oil spills in Southern California.

In two separate but independent actions recently, the state issued a revised oil spill contingency plan and the city attorney's office in Los Angeles disclosed that it now is taking a tougher attitude toward oil spill offenders in Los Angeles harbor.

Beyond that, the Coast Guard is operating an aggressive enforcement system under the Federal Port and Waterway Safety Act, which was passed two years ago.

As a result of the various efforts, the ports of Long Beach and Los Angeles "are clean, and getting cleaner," as one Coast Guard official put it.

Among other things, the revised state contingency plan provides citizens with an around-the-clock, toll-free number to call in case of an oil spill, whether it occurs on land or water. The number is (800) 852-7550.

According to state fish and game Inspector W. H. Putman, the new state plan makes certain that affected localities will be made a part of the state operating team assigned to control large spills.

In earlier plans, few if any provisions were made for direct and active participation by the cities once the state or federal government stepped in. "Now, if we have a major spill," explained Putman, "we will have city people at the command center, and they can have all available information at their disposal." In addition, he said, the localities would be given a part in planning containment measures.

The state plan is an elaborate stand-by scheme for quickly organizing a state operating team in the event a spill is deemed serious enough to warrant state intervention. Its members primarily would include representatives of various state agencies. The team would also include industry representatives if a company or corporation were involved in the spill or its cleanup.

Putman said the plan also takes into account the need to keep the public informed. It does so by calling for the appointment of a public information officer whenever an

No on Proposition A

Proposition A on Tuesday's ballot asks that the people of Los Angeles County agree to divert some highway funds to "guideways" for a mass transit program in the area covered by the Southern California Rapid Transit District.

In November the people of the county will be asked to approve a one-cent boost in our sales tax for rapid transit.

YET NO ONE knows what rapid transit plan we are being asked to buy and we won't know until after Tuesday's election when the RTD has scheduled more public hearings on the subject.

That is not because the RTD hasn't put a lot of plans forward in the last few years. They have. In fact they have put the same basic plan forward several times.

The major problem now and in the past is that the plan can't be financed. The total program the RTD is talking about for rail would involve almost $7 billion. That's right — seven billion dollars. And it depends upon Uncle Sam — who says he doesn't have the money — to provide the bulk of the dough.

Incidentally, if that $7 billion system were ever built, it would require not only the unattainable capital subsidy from Uncle Sam, the highway funds sought under Proposition A and the sales tax to be sought in November but much more in the way of operating subsidy.

The Joint Legislative Audit Committee, in a report last November, said the yearly operating deficit of the RTD's full system in addition to the funds above would increase from $6 million in 1977 to $32.2 million in 1980, $183.4 million in 1985, $419.5 million in 1990 and to $1,167 million (that's over one billion dollars a year) in the year 2000.

THE FUNDS WE would be expected to put up through Proposition A and through the one-cent sales tax boost wouldn't finance a system. The local tax funds basically would only begin to finance the first phase or two of what the RTD calls a building program block.

That building block program envisions starting with a surface line from Compton to downtown Los Angeles and a subway out Wilshire Boulevard to the Santa Monica area. A second phase would provide a connecting line from Hollywood to the Eagle Rock area and a line into the San Fernando Valley. And that likely is all that could ever be built.

A third phase the RTD talks about would add lines headed from Santa Monica toward Inglewood and a short one from downtown Los Angeles toward Santa Ana. The fourth phase finally contemplates running a line from Compton to Long Beach and from Compton towards Orange County.

When you get to phase four, that completes the dreamed of $7 billion program.

BUT LISTEN to what Long Beach City Manager John Mansell reported to the city council May 14:

". . . based on current projections of anticipated future federal subsidies, it appears that inadequate funds will be available to fund any improvements beyond Phase II. . . . It is therefore conceivable that the only major transit service proposed for the city of Long Beach will never become a reality."

Another way of putting it is that the only places in the county that likely would ever be served are the corridors from Compton to downtown Los Angeles and from there to Santa Monica. Possibly the connectors to Eagle Rock and the San Fernando Valley could sometime be built.

THE REST OF Los Angeles County essentially would be contributing hundreds of millions in diverted auto use and gasoline taxes as well as sales taxes to build a downtown Los Angeles subway line.

Mansell estimated, for example, that Long Beach would send about $40 million in sales tax money to downtown Los Angeles for its subway.

There are other possible ways of providing mass rapid transit for the whole area than building $60-million-a-mile subways under downtown Los Angeles. The RTD has yet to fully explore these. Until such time as new approaches are completely studied and a financially feasible program is proposed we can see no reason why all of Los Angeles County residents should send their tax money to downtown Los Angeles.

WE THEREFORE strongly urge a NO vote on County Proposition A. It may be hard to find on your ballot but it is certainly one issue worth seeking out with diligence.

Our area needs good, balanced public transportation but we don't need to pour almost $2.5 billion into a 33-mile downtown L.A. subway line and. thereby foreclose any real possibility of ever having a true area-wide system that serves all of the cities and communities in the area.

WHEN AND IF the RTD comes up with a fiscally sound area-wide program that serves everyone there will be plenty of time to authorize use of gasoline and auto use taxes for transit.

If you hope to ever get a rail transit system that will serve our area you will serve that aim best by voting NO on Proposition A.

Three able officials

In three nonpartisan races, this newspaper endorses three able incumbents.

Two hold Los Angeles County offices: Sheriff Peter Pitchess and Assessor Philip Watson. The third, Wilson Riles, is state superintendent of public instruction.

A lawyer and former FBI agent, Pitchess has demonstrated superb administrative ability and a sense of fairness since he became sheriff in 1958. He runs the country's largest sheriff's office, and runs it well.

When he became assessor in 1962, Watson already had 14 years of experience in the office. He has been a consistent fighter for tax reform and he runs a modern, efficient office.

Riles is completing his first term as the state's school chief with a record of working effectively with both a Republican governor and a Democratic legislature. Under his leadership, California schools have made strides in financing and in educational innovation.

We recommend the re-election of Sheriff Peter Pitchess, Assessor Philip Watson and State Superintendent of Public Instruction Wilson Riles.

Congress buries reform plans

WASHINGTON—With a splendid show of indignation, the leaders of Congress are investigating the Watergate scandals. But they have quietly buried the reforms that would prevent future Watergates from happening.

The scandals have dramatized the need, above all, for campaign reforms to clean up the political process. Something should also be done to snap Congress out of its legislative lethargy. And the monarchical claims of President Nixon ought to be curbed.

THESE REFORMS have been wafted around Capitol Hill on great gusts of hot air only to drift, inevitably, into some obscure and unattended corner. Meanwhile, most congressmen solemnly declare their devotion to changes which, marvelously, never seem to occur.

The most urgent need is for "a Clean Elections Act," which Rep. John Anderson, R-Ill., and Morris Udall, D-Ariz., have offered. It would largely eliminate the campaign fund-raising abuses, which the Watergate prosecutors say have produced "the largest number of criminal investigations still pending."

Already, they have filed criminal charges against 16 individuals and 13 corporations. And of the 56 separate allegations of improper conduct originally lodged against President Nixon, more than 20 were related directly to the influence which campaign contributions had on governmental decisions.

AN ARMY of lobbyists, packing thick bankrolls, also swarm over Capitol Hill. They stay in the gray shadows, cool, convivial and, if possible, invisible. It is becoming increasingly difficult to distinguish between a subtle bribe and a campaign donation.

Yet the "Clean Elections Act," which would help change all this, is languishing in the House Administration Committee.

A year ago, the Democratic leadership started to prod the committee by adopting a resolution calling for a campaign bill in time for the 1974 election. But the chairman, Rep. Wayne Hays, d-Ohio, persuaded the policymakers that he intended to act swiftly. So instead, the leadership commended his committee for its fine intentions. The committee has now reached page seven of a 30-page bill.

THE FEISTY, flamboyant Hays, meanwhile, found time to slip through an amendment, which abolished an earlier reform. His measure scraps the requirement that congressional travel expenses be printed in the Congressional Record for the constituents back home to read.

Presiding over all this chicanery is a small clique of tired old men who have achieved power by their dogged ability to hold on to their seats. Most are from districts or states where the rival party is too weak to challenge them. Their ability to stay in Congress under such circumstances and their good judgment in picking such states for residency are the only criteria by which committee chairmen are selected.

THEIR POWER is tremendous. They can stimulate legislation or destroy it to suit their friends, contributors or their own financial interests.

To stop the abuses, Speaker Carl Albert appointed a special panel to revamp the House's committee system. Its carefully researched recommendations were presented to the Democratic caucus three weeks ago. A secret vote was taken behind closed doors and the reforms were pigeonholed.

This has produced a backlash from some of the more conscientious congressmen. In a letter stamped "personal and confidential," Rep. Lloyd Meeds, D-Wash., has protested to Rep. Julia Butler Hansen, D-Wash., who has been given custody of the reforms:

"I cannot conceive that the American people, given the revelations of Watergate and their revulsion to backroom decision making, will tolerate the reference—by secret ballot—of this nationally important matter to a partisan group of Democrats.

"I do not contend," continues the Meeds letter, "that the work of the Select Committee on Committees is perfect. Indeed, there will probably be changes made. But those changes should be made in the full glare of public scrutiny on the floor of the House of Representatives by members of both parties."

Yes on Proposition 5

Article 26 of California's constitution, approved by the voters in 1938, restricts use of gasoline and automobile user taxes to highway-related purposes.

A number of attempts have been made since then to divert some or all of the funds for other purposes. The latest attempt was in 1970, and Proposition 18 then was defeated by almost 500,000 votes.

ON TUESDAY — in Proposition 5 — voters will again be asked to amend the constitution to free these funds for other uses under control of the legislature. Besides highway uses the money could be spent for:

"The research, planning, construction, and improvement of exclusive public mass transit guideways (and their related fixed facilities), including the mitigation of their environmental effects, the payment for property taken or damaged for such purposes, the administrative costs necessarily incurred in the foregoing purposes, and the maintenance of the structures and the immediate right-of-way for the public mass transit guideways, but excluding the maintenance and operating costs for mass transit power systems and mass transit passenger facilities, vehicles, equipment and services."

UNDER PROPOSITION 5 there would be no constitutional limits to the amount of money that could be diverted by the legislature from highway uses to mass transit guideways. The legislature has passed a conditional law, which can be changed, that initially would limit the amount to 25 per cent yearly after 1977 unless more was needed to match federal grants.

In addition, the new constitution section contained in Proposition 5 would allow up to 25 per cent of highway funds to be pledged for retirement of voter-approved road bonds.

One other provision in Proposition 5 is of major importance. Funds couldn't be diverted to mass transit construction unless approved by the local voters concerned. In our case "local" means Los Angeles County, and such a measure is also on Tuesday's ballot. (See our accompanying editorial recommending a No vote on Proposition A in Los Angeles County.)

THERE IS NO question but what the general Los Angeles area suffers from lack of good public transportation. A more balanced approach is necessary, not only to relieve congestion on freeways and to fight smog but to improve mobility for those who do not drive.

Proposition 5 will make some funds available for transit, if approved by local voters. It also will cut the amount of money available to both state and local governments for building new roads and for repair and maintenance of them.

Proposition 5 will offer a chance to increase the flow of federal transit money to California by providing matching funds for transit projects.

This year the state taxes derived from motorists amount to about $1.3 billion. The money now is split this way: $570 million for state highway construction, $400 million for city and county road construction, $250 million for the Highway Patrol, Department of Motor Vehicles and Air Resources Board, and $280 million for planning, maintenance and administration.

NO ONE KNOWS just how much of this would be diverted to transit or whether the legislature would just cut back on the above expenditures or raise new taxes to maintain the present programs.

Proposition 5, unlike Proposition 18 in 1970, has little organized opposition, although the California Highway Commission and the California Chamber of Commerce are opposing it on the basis that it makes no new money available for transportation but would assure inadequate funding for two programs — transit and roads — rather than just inadequate funding for roads.

These newspapers have long fought for better public transportation. We tried our best to keep the old Red Car system going. Although the private automobile is the obvious transportation choice of most people, there are many who cannot use autos. Fuel shortages and smog are major problems.

WE ARE NOT satisfied with the transit plans which have been advanced by the Southern California Rapid Transit District but new plans can be made.

On balance, and particularly because of the local voter approval provisions, we recommend a Yes vote on Proposition 5. It can offer a beginning for a better transportation system in the state's major cities

Questions and answers about Proposition 9

(The most complex and controversial proposition on Tuesday's ballot is No. 9. This newspaper recommends a No vote. These questions and answers about the propositions may help voters reach their decision.)

1. Who will Proposition 9 affect?

• The neighborhood group concerned about working with, electing or recalling a member of its school board, water district or city council.

• Individuals and organizations dealing with government.

• Every labor union member or businessman who in concert with his fellows seeks to support or defeat a legislative proposal at the state or local level.

• Citizen action groups, public interest organizations, trade associations and others whose right to petition government is exercised through professional lobbyists.

2. How does Proposition 9 restrict the individual citizen's participation in politics?

In many ways, but one illustration stands out dramatically. Historically, Californians have made extensive use of the direct legislative process, setting public policy themselves by voting on initiative and referendum proposals as well as tax increases and bond issues.

Working men and women often speak through their unions; professionals through associations; citizen action groups through committees; and parents, homeowners and taxpayers through similar coalitions.

Under Proposition 9 any such committee which intends to spend more than $10,000 on a state ballot measure — enough to buy about one page of advertising in just two or three of California's numerous metropolitan newspapers — must seek permission to do so from a politically appointed Fair Political Practices Commission by filing a statement listing the amount it wishes to spend.

Before it grants permission, the commission must find that the committee has the ability to incur such expenditures — an act of judgment which can override that citizen group's own decision to participate in the campaign. And the commission need not act on the request until 21 days prior to the election, a date far too late for effective commitment of campaign resources.

Proposition 9 also limits total expenditures for or against a statewide ballot measure by a complex formula which could prevent a small group or organization from effectively carrying its views to the electorate.

A mass membership group with thousands of volunteer workers on one side could claim they were only going to spend a few thousand dollars and thus force a low spending limit on their opponents.

3. How does this affect the issue of free speech?

An equal component in the protection of free speech is the right to communicate one's views on public issues, no matter how controversial, no matter who the spokesman. If Proposition 9 succeeds in inhibiting that ability to communicate in the slightest degree, the political process in California and the First Amendment guarantees of the U.S. Constitution are equally tarnished.

4. What does Proposition 9 mean to candidates and those who vote for them?

Proposition 9's spending limitation upon gubernatorial candidates in the primary is 7 cents multiplied by the state's voting age population and 9 cents multiplied similarly in the general election. All other candidates for statewide elective office are limited to 3 cents in the primary election and 3 cents in the general election multipled by the state's voting age population. In the five months prior to a statewide election, the state central committees of the political parties would be limited to the expenditure of one cent multiplied by the state's voting age population.

If Proposition 9 were law this year, in the five months before the primary, candidates for the Democratic and Republican nominations would be limited to expenditures of less than $1 million each.

In an effort to offset the advantages of incumbency, Proposition 9 provides that the limitations shall be reduced by 10 per cent in the campaigns of current officeholders.

All expenditure limitations are for the five months before an election. There is nothing to prevent a statewide officeholder from spending $1 million, $5 million or $10 million a year from the day he is elected until he must again lay his candidacy on the line four years later. Nor is there a line restricting a challenger from similar pre-campaign expenditures.

5. Can't an individual still contribute what he wishes to the candidate of his choice?

Yes. Proposition 9's hooker comes if the individual chooses to campaign independently or with others for or against a candidate.

The measure limits such independent committees to expenditures of $10,000 in support of or in opposition to candidates unless it applies to the Fair Political Practices Commission, which can approve additional expenditures in behalf of a candidate up to the amount of one cent multiplied by the state's voting age population. The increase above the measure's basic limitations would also be granted to other candidates.

6. Does Proposition 9 affect a citizen's right to petition his government?

The measure restricts expenditures for circulation or qualification of statewide petitions. For practical purposes, this would make it impossible for a small group to qualify an initiative or referendum for the ballot by hiring enough petition circulators to do the job. The right to petition would be limited, in essence, to organizations able to turn out great numbers of volunteer circulators.

7. What are some of the proposition's provisions about lobbying?

It substantially broadens the legal definition of lobbyist. Some attorneys say the measure would require registration and reporting in Sacramento by virtually every paid representative of a union, a civic organization, a public interest group or a trade association who deals with legislative bodies and even other government agencies. This would include a developer and his attorneys, chamber of commerce representatives and paid consultants to taxpayer groups.

The measure also prohibits a lobbyist from making a contribution to a candidate or his committee or arranging for others to make contributions.

The California Labor Federation says this "would mean that every union official in California would be denied the right to be connected in any manner with a political contribution if such union officials have been either directly, or through representatives, presenting opinions in behalf of union members to a state governmental agency or to the state legislature."

8. Are there exemptions from lobbying controls for persons or groups that must deal with the legislature or government agencies?

Yes. Elected and appointed state officials are exempted. The initiative also exempts newspapers, magazines, book publishers, radio and television stations, and their employes. But some lawyers say that if a newspaper or broadcast company belongs to a trade association that lobbies or if it engages a lobbyist itself, the exemption would not apply.

The measure further exempts bona fide church representatives when they appear "solely for the purpose of protecting the public right to practice the doctrines of such church." But if a paid pastor was instructed by his congregation or his superiors in the church to testify on such issues as birth control he and his church would be subject to all the lobbying requirements and restrictions of Proposition 9.

9. If Proposition 9 were to become law, how could it be amended or repealed?

The measure requires a two-thirds vote of both houses of the legislature for amendment — and then only "to further its purposes by statute." Attorneys say this requirement might be struck down by the courts. If it is, the proposition could only be amended or repealed by the voters.

10. How would Proposition 9 be enforced?

By a Fair Political Practices Commission with broad investigatory powers, including that of subpoena, and the right to levy financial penalties. There would be audits and investigation of reports by the Franchise Tax Board, and civil and criminal penalties would be enforced by the attorney general and county district attorneys.

Individual citizens would also be able to bring civil actions against alleged violators of sections of the measure dealing with reporting, contributions and lobbying. The plaintiff would receive 50 per cent of the amount recovered by such lawsuits — a proviso that could encourage harassment of citizens and organizations.

Recommendations for ballot measures

In response to readers I am giving my recommendations for voting on the nine state measures, one county question and Metropolitan Water District bond issue on next Tuesday's ballot. Voters are urged to carefully read the pro and con arguments in the Voters Pamphlet and other arguments that have been available to them. My conclusions have been given in my last three columns. Following are my recommendations.

Prop. 1—is the $250 million state bond issue to allow purchase and development of park and beach lands for state-operated recreational areas. In many now developed areas overcrowding deprives many people of enjoying these facilities. It does not mean a property tax. I will vote For Prop. 1.

Prop. 2—is another bond issue of $250 million for the purpose of providing treatment plants for sewage disposal and other projects to guarantee clean water for our use. It will be used by state, county and local agencies for this purpose. It would not mean local property tax increases. I will vote For Prop. 2.

Prop.3—is a bond issue of $350 million to be used as loans to California veterans for the purchase of farms and homes. Past records of such loans show the cost has been entirely paid for by the repayment with interest by the veterans. The 280,000 California veterans who served in Vietnam deserve the same opportunity we have accorded veterans of other wars. For these reasons I will vote For Prop. 3.

Prop. 4—will provide that a property owner whose property is damaged or destroyed can ask for and receive a reassessment of its value for tax purposes. This is now only where disaster has struck an area with many losses. I feel the individual is entitled to the same protection. I will vote Yes on Prop. 4.

Prop.5—provides that a portion of the gasoline, motor vehicle and license taxes can be used for rapid transit in an area where the voters approve such a program. Such a program is proposed for Los Angeles County. But it does not include Long Beach whose vehicle users would be paying for part of the cost. Some other areas do include all parts of the area. I will vote Yes on Prop. 5 for that reason. But I will vote No on "County Question" A—which would have to be approved before the money for rapid transit can be used in Los Angeles County. At a later election if Long Beach is included I would vote Yes on such a proposal.

Prop.6—would provide that the state legislature and committees would have to operate in open sessions so the public could attend. It would take a two-thirds vote of either house to hold closed door sessions. I will vote Yes on Prop. 6.

Prop. 7—would provide a new commission to plan for further education of high school graduates including vocational training. Prop. 7 would exempt from Civil Service the chief administrator and five deputies. This would permit flexibility for its staff. It is much needed in our educational system. I will vote Yes on Prop. 7.

Prop. 8—applies only to Sacramento County where plans are being made to consolidate city and county governments. This measure would permit cities in the county to remain independent. But this measure would permit the consolidation of government between the county and cities that voted to do so. I will vote Yes on Prop. 8.

Prop.9—is referred to as Political Reform Initiative. It is supposed to take corruption out of politics. But its provisions are so drastic that I consider them unworkable. It would discourage many honorable and able people from seeking public office because they are not willing to disclose all their personal and family assets. That is a privacy most of us would not be willing to give up, unless there was a specific issue involved that called for such disclosure. Other provisions in the 20,000-word initiative are so drastic they would disrupt our system of goverment in many ways. We have dishonest people in public offices but the percentage is probably no greater than is found in most of our business-labor unions or other segments of our society. Because of some of the unsound provisions I will vote No on Prop. 9.

County Question A—has been referred to in my views on Prop. 5. I will vote for Prop. 5 to allow vehicle user taxes for Rapid Transit districts. But that can affect Los Angeles County only if Prop. A is approved. I will vote No on Prop. A because it will not serve Long Beach whose vehicle users must play a large part of the cost.

The Metropolitan Water District measure Prop. W—is a revenue bond issue to pay for a 300-mile system to bring Northern California water to the south. It is essential to our future water supplies. Its cost will be paid from sale of the water to the many area water departments. Because it is essential I will vote Yes on Prop. W.

Lakewood homes fail inspection

By LARRY LYNCH
Staff Writer

City inspectors have found one or more building code violations in most of the 433 Lakewood homes sold since Feb. 22, Charles Chivetta, director of community development, has reported.

The inspections are being conducted under a trend-setting city ordinance, effective that day, which requires a report of any violations be given all home buyers.

The procedure has been applauded by many sellers as well as buyers, Chivetta told the City Council; it has also met with complaints, some "warranted and others that are not."

Chivetta said his department has attempted to overcome the complaints through group training sessions with the building inspectors.

As a result, he said, in the future inspectors "will list only those health and general welfare code correction items which may cause problems and require mandatory compliance. Items which may cause problems but are of a minor nature will be listed as...a suggestive correction notice.'y Violations uncovered in homes that changed hands since February include: unvented water heaters, exposed electrical wiring, gas dryers or heaters located in bedrooms, secretive additions (arid) removal of bearing walls causing buckling of ceilings," Chivetta said.

Bellflower realtor Daniel J. Keulen complained to the council that a porch overhang which improves the appearance of a home he has for sale at 5421 Ashworth Street has been ordered removed.

The addition was built without a building permit and Keulen was requesting some procedure for granting a variance in the cause of such "attractive" illegal additions.

His request was referred to the city planning commission although John Todd, city attorney, said, "there is no legal basis to grant a variance just because (such) an addition is attractive..."

The only legal approach would be to try to change the language of the ordinance to make such an exception, Todd said.

Chivetta told the Lakewood council that a similar point-of-sale home inspection procedure is being considered in Cerritos, Long Beach, Downey and Paramount "depending on how our ordinance works out."

The East Long Beach Neighborhood Center is giving away the equivalent of $150 in medical assistance today at the Escuela de la Raza.

Escuela de la Raza is a bilingual, bicultural preschool for children in East Long Beach which offers a bilingual approach to the Headstart program.

The Center is giving a free medical examination to any child whose parents want it. Its "Feria de Salud" (health fair) will run from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at 1640 E. 14th St.

Equivalent services from private physicians would cost from $125 to $150 each, Ron Arias, a pre-med student participating in the event, said.

The program, which began Saturday, was made possible through the efforts of Chicanos for Creative Medicine, 42nd Medical Services Battalion of theU. S. Air Force, Long Beach Health Department, the Heart Association, the Lung Association, Los Angeles County Nutritional Services, state Department of Rehabilitation, Cerritos Hospital and many student volunteers, most of whom are USC medical students who live in the community.

Today's program includes counseling and information on nutrition, drug abuse, venereal disease, the resources of local health agencies, and eligibility rules for Medi-Cal and food stamps.

Physical checkups and free measles immunizations will also be given today, spokesmen for the center said. They said the vaccine has been donated by the Long Beach Department of Public Health, which is providing some of the volunteer workers.

As on Saturday, the LongBeach Paramedics will stage a rescue operation in the afternoon.

The two-day health program was set up, according to Margie Rodriguez, a spokeswoman for the center, because "La Gente (the people) need this kind of service, and everyone is so helpful, I hope more gente take advantage of this."

Long way from Lakewood

'Y' director schooled on South Seas island

HAL LOWE

In 1967, Jeff Boal, 30, was ten thousand miles away working with youths and now, seven years later, he's still at it , but closer to home.

Jeff, executive director of the Lakewood YMCA, served two years as a teacher with the Peace Corps on the island of Peleliu inshPalau islands in Micronesia, which is a few hundred miles east of the Phillipines.

A sociology majog the University of California at Santa Barbara, Jeff said he was looking at two alternatives yhe graduated, a stint in the military servir graduate school. However, a recruiter's table on the campus gave him a third alternative so he signed on with the Peace Corps to gain practical experience in sociology.

"I trained for several weeks in Miami, Florida, with other volunteers, lfkng to speak the language of the Palauans and getting to know the customs of the people," Jeff said.

He was assigned to the seven-by-two-mile island to teach English to the children in the school.

The Palau islands have had three cultural invasions in the last sixty years, he said.

They were governed by Germany until World War I, then came under Japanese dominion unh945 when they were made a trust of the United States.

"Because of these outside influences, the old native customs araling by the wayside, he said, and the younger generation isoming Amkknized.

Jeff said that in the last three decades two traumatic events have occurred on the islands:

On September 15, 1944, about 5,000 Japanese soldiers tried to fight off the invasion of Peleliu by elements of the First U.S. Marine Division.

The battle, which engulfed the island, lxthe entire Japanese garrison dead and the island itself dotted with the morbid souvenirs of the conflict—rusting tanks, junk filled bunkers and closed-up caves where entire Japanese units were buried alive.

In 1963, a devastating typhoon struck the islandpqng out all the homes and killing many of the natives.

From these two events, thpulation of 600 began bild a socisxore attuned to Western and especially American ways.

"Akythe typhoon, the government came in and moved the natives from several small hamlets into a central town. They still retain a sort of caste system with villagers from the same hamlets king close together," Jeff said.

The natives support themselves mainly by fishing but some have been able to set up Wesm style enterprises. For example, one nq salvage company makes a small profit by collecting the metal left over from the battle of 30 years ago.

Jeff said he lived with a native family during his stay in a house that was comfortable but had few modern conveniences. He said he broke the tedium by reading, collecting shells on thexh and uxg meetings with other Peace Corps volunteers teaching on other islands.

At one such meeting he met Jean Waring of Glendale, who was teaching on the island of Babelthuap. When the two finished their Peace Corps assignments, they returned to the United States and were married.

"It's great that we both speak Palauan," Jeff said. "There are times when we are out in public when we want to talk privately and we can do it in the language we studied."

Jeff and Jean returned to the Palaus for three weeks a few years ago nd said they found the islands more Americanized than ever.

At the Lakewood Y, Jeff oversees the activities of some 4,000 youngsters.

It's a far cry from he handful of native children he taught on the island, but, on the other hand, working here means he has more to do in his off hours than collect shells and look at war relics.

Aviation support center in works for L.B. airport

By HERB SHANNON
Aerospace Editor

A new business and commercial aviation support center designed to generate $25 million annually for the local economy in sales and service volume is expected to be ready for occupancy at Long Beach Airport early next year.

Plans for construction of the WestWings Center facility at an estimated cost in excess of $1 million were announced by Aerotron Aircraft Radio, Inc., a Long Beach-based avionics firm with a British subsidiary operating throughout the United Kingdom, Europe, the Middle East and Africa.

The two-story steel, concrete and glass structure will be located on a seven-acre site adjacent to the airport traffic control tower at 3521 E. Spring St. Ipql be the largest facility of its kind in the western U.S., providing more than 33,000 square feet of office and shop space in addition to 19,000 square feet of hangar space.

The development will be operated by Cal-Aerotron, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of the parent firm, which will lease excess space to qualified aviation service companies in related fields.

In announcing the development, Aerotron chairman and president R. C. Cannady said the Long Beach facility will be world headquarters for corporate operations, including those of Aerotron, Ltf ts London-based subsidiary.

Cannady said growth of the business since it was established in 1968 in leased quarters at the airport required the new building program.

Gross sales climbed from the first year figure of $100,000 in domestic operations to the current international multimillion-dollar level, and Aerotron has taken its place as one of the industry's leading companies in the sale, distribution, modification and installation of aviation electronic communication, navigation and instrumentation equipment.

"We are building a complex which will offer a complete spectrum of services to meet the specific needs of business and commercial aircraft," Cannady said. "WestWings will be the most modern one-stop center for aircraft modification and maintenance, support services and related businesses.

"Firms selected as tenants will be carefully screened for industry standing, as well as their contribution to the overall capability of the center, so that the maximum of services will be available with no duplication."

Bill McAfee, WestWings project director, pointed out that the Spring Street site was selected because of easy access of Long Beach Airport's 10,000-foot runway, excellent surface street visibility and capacity for future growth.

The center's hangar area and outdoor hardstands will be constructed on a 12-inch concrete slab for parking and taxiing high gross weight aircraft. Entry to the hangar will accommodate wing spans up to 150 feet and tail assembly heights of 40 feet.

Approximately 16,500 square feet of combination office and shop space will be available around the perimeter of the hangar floor, with individual outside entrances from adjacent auto parking spaces.

Second level executive officwull be occupied by firms specializing in various fields of corporate and commercial aviation, with selected suites set aside for tenants requiring custom-designed accommodations.

WestWings Center will feature a closed-circuit TV surveillance syshnd an automated after-hours card security system. Wide corridors, a central foyer, and reception area, low energy lighting, air conditioning, soundproofing, cushioned carpeting and custom partitioning and paneling are essentials of the center's design.

Company officials term their prediction of a $25-million boost to the Long Beach economy as "conservative," based on full operation of Aerotron and associated enterprises as a combined support center.

Court test looms on distribution of high school off-campus paper

By WALT MURRAY
Staff Writer

First Amendment guarantees are clashing with school rules in a controversy over distribution of an off-campus newspaper at Long Beach high schools. The dispute appears headed for court.

Although students were allowed to hand out the most recent issue of the paper, The Rising Star, after prior approval by school officials, the paper's editors are far from happy with that arrangement.

They fear a repetition of the ban that school officials placed on February's Rising Star. It was barred from school grounds because administrators objected to two allegedly obscene words in a letter-to-the-editor.

Five students were given short suspensions when they handed out that edition on sidewalks near the high schools.

Officials of the Long Beach Unified School District say their regulations are in harmony with state education guidelines and that they're only trying to keep "offensive" material off the schoolgrounds.

"Our rules certainly do not prevent students from distributing newspapers freely off campus," said Neil W. Philips, assistant superintendent in charge of high schools. "Our rules do provide clear channels of communication for requesting to distribute material on campus."

Philips said the five students were suspended for "willful disobedience" in violating those rules. School authority extends to the "immediate vicinity" of campus, he said.

School officials appear most concerned that relaxing their control over what's handed out on or near school grounds might lead to the distribution of extremist publications that would incite students to illegal acts.

But the student editors of Rising Star believe that state guidelines would cover such papers and that school administrators are being overly harsh in applying the rules to them. They also distrust the school officials' motives.

AN EDITORIAL in the most recent edition of Rising Star inconclusively mulled over the question of whether administrators are harassing the newspaper because they are "culturally puritan"—or are using the allegedly obscene words to curb the paper for political reasons—or are "trying to keep students subordinate within the educational system."

The students say they believe the First Amendment must be taken at face value—that no law shall be made to abridge the freedom ofthe press—but they're willing to settle for a compromise involving some prior review by school officials.

The basic issue is to what extent school rules can intrude on First Amendment guarantees.

Art Gottlieb, a Long Beach attorney aiding the students, said that one clause in school regulations that deals with obscenity is flatly unconstitutional. He also questioned the way school authorities review publications before allowing them to he handed out.

In an Apr. 16 letter to Philips, Gottlieb said that unless new policies were formulated he'd seek relief in court.

The Rising Star, barely one year old, is the latest in sporadic attempts by Long Beach high school students to publish an underground, alternative or off-campus newspaper during the last eight years. Rising Star is the first paper aimed at students in all five major city high schools.

ITS PRESENT editor is 18-year-old Jerry Neuberger, a Wilson High School student who plans to enter UC Santa Barbara next fall and major in political science.

Neuberger said the Rising Star plays a role that establishment high school papers—those produced in journalism classes—can't possibly play.

"The journalism teachers have to approve everything that goes into school papers, and that's censorship," Neuberger said. "The censorship usually comes in the form of understanding among student editors that there are many things they can't publish. They also know they'll be graded on what they write."

"Nothing can be printed about subjects outside the school itself. In talking to student editors in Orange County and elsewhere, I found that Long Beach is stricter than most districts about that."

The Rising Star is politically left-oriented and its news columns are more opinionated than most of the "straight" press, but it is fairly moderate in comparison to most partisan papers.

Besides the two allegedly obscene words in the February edition, the paper contained articles advocating gay rights, women's rights and bicycle paths for Long Beach. An anonymous Greek student studying in local

Wife freed in alleged death plot

An insurance salesman who wrote a $134,000 policy on himself, and allegedly was marked for death by his wife, doesn't want to prosecute her, he told Municpal Court Judge Eugene Langhauser in Santa Ana.

Douglas King pleaded for the court to release Lola Marguerite King, 47, to his custody and said he would get an attorney and a doctor for her.

Santa Ana police accused Mrs. King of soliciting an armed man to murder King for $5,000 and claimed that she agreed to pay $250 down and the balance when she collected on his insurance.

The armed man was an undercover officer, who arrested Mrs. King and booked her into the Orange County Jail.

Langhauser agreed to release her to the custody of her husband, and ordered her to return to his court May 31 for arraignment, when he will decide the matter.

Homicide patterns show geography is a factor ed with a pistol and started firing point blank. She said she escaped by running and falling, appearing to be hit.

On Nov. 28, a Saturday five weeks later, the bodies of two young women were found in the fields near the intersection.

The women, who had been strangled and raped, were later identified as Swiss citizens reported missing in San Francisco: Anna Rose Hertner and Sussanne Mohr, both 24. They were last seen by two boyfriends, Swiss ski instructors who parted with the girls in San Francisco. The men were questioned by police and released. Why or how the girls came to the southern part of the state remains a mystery.

The seventh and last victim of an unsolved 1973 murder debited to the eight cities was Vicki Lynn Davis, 24, of 1423 W. 227th St., Torrance.

She was found slumped behind the wheel of her car on the eastbound Rosecrans Avenue off-ramp of the Long Beach Freeway in Paramount.

Her death occurred on a Thursday in March. Police said a shotgun projectile pierced the windshield of her car and struck her in the head. The car was in gear with the ignition on but the engine dead when a passerby discovered her body at about 11 p.m.

An hour earlier she had left her mother at a Torrance bowling alley saying she was on her way to visit a friend in Paramount.

Most of the other homicides in the eight cities in 1973 involved fights, family feuds and beatings. In Norwalk, two robbers were killed and ended up homicide statistics, though they initiated the violence.

A 1970-71 study of murder throughout California shows that this pattern is typical: friends or acquaintances killed one another often enough to make up 41 per cent of homicides; man versus wife killings were 14.8 per cent; robbery-involved killings were 13.5 per cent; miscellaneous homicides including senseless murders were 10.2 per cent; parents killing children accounted for 5.6 per cent; killings involving other crimes were 5.3 per cent; other family killings were 5 per cent; rape-involved murders were 3.4 per cent; children killing parents were 1.2 per cent.

Homicide victims most commonly are in their 20's. The statewide study found the homicide rate for the ages 20 to 24 was 16.8 per 100,000 population.

The latest homicide rate for area policed by the Los Angeles County sheriff's department was 11.1 per 100,000 population, somewhat above the last reported national rate of 8.9.

Of the eight cities in this area, only Carson and Hawaiian Gardens far exceeded the county rate. Others showed up average or less; Lakewood had the least incidence of homicide, just one incident in almost two years.

Dispute over off-campus paper

schools wrote criticism of the Greek dictatorship.

THE PAPER reprinted a Poly Hi-Life editorial commenting on the Rising Star controversy and ran its own editorial rebutting the Hi-Life stand.

In addition, there were several dispatches from the Liberation News Service, a left-oriented syndicate, on the Chilean coup, on reporters working for the CIA, and on the recent Farah strike in Texas.

The most recent April edition has much the same format, with even more space devoted to the ongoing battle between the Rising Star and the Unified School District. An interview with Jerald Jacobs, chairman of the Long Beach Board of Education, is on the center-fold.

Neuberger said the Rising Star is not financed by any outside organization. Bulk copies have been sent to the Peace and Freedom Party, the National Organization of Women and the League of Women Voters, he said.

Neuberger said a little money comes in from advertising from local shops and bookstores and from subscriptions, but most of the Rising Star's finances come from the student editors themselves. Each edition costs about $100 and recent press runs have averaged 3,700 copies. They have been handed out at all five high schools.

THE PAPER first ran into trouble with school authorities when students were cited for handing out last September's issue near school grounds. Philips wrote five parents telling them their children had violated school rules and would be suspended if they did it again.

When students submitted February's issue for school approval, it was rejected on grounds of the two alleged obscenities.

Philips cites district regulations requiring that "student expression" be in "good taste" and barring material that is "vulgar or profane." In a clause that is particularly offensive to Gottlieb, "vulgar" is defined as that which is "lewd, profane, coarse, crude or offensive" and "which infringes on the minimum standards of propriety and the accepted norm of public behavior."

"The activities directors of the individual campuses rejected the February issue because of vulgar statements in it," Philips said.

Neuberger said the February issue—and all preceeding issues—were handed out on sidewalks bordering school grounds or at intersections where students cross the street to enter the school, since school law bars distributing papers on campus without prior approval.

Philips said that still violates the high school guidance and discipline code, which appears to give authorities jurisdiction over student conduct in the "immediate vicinity" of campus during school hours.

"The students didn't come to their principals or me," Philips said. "They just went ahead and handed the paper out."

Gottlieb questions that authority, but the crux of his argument against school officials revolves around the issues of obscenity and interpretation of state guidelines.

He said the state education code, upon which local guidelines are supposed to be modeled, doesn't call for as strict an interpretation as Long Beach school officials give it, and does call for maximum freedom of expression for students.

The education code bars material that is "obscene, libelous or slanderous according to current legal standards," but says nothing about community standards.

GUIDELINES drawn up by the state Board of Education in the wake of recent court cases "unanimously call for an unfettered and uncensored medium of expression through student publications," Gottlieb said. "Whatever freedom is granted to a school-sponsored newspapr applies to publications not related to the school district."

He takes strongest exception to the way district officials interpret state rules on "manner of expression."

"The state Board of Education is talking about not shoving the paper into someone's face," Gottlieb said. "But the local rules talk about content of expression, then go ahead and define it in such ridiculous terms that nobody could know if they were breaking the law or not. What are 'minimal standards of decency in the community,' anyway?"

The most recent court rulings have stated that the only obscene materials that can be regulated are those depicting sexual conduct, he said.

Gottlieb also takes issue with the review process by which school administrators approve or reject newspapers.

"Let's say the kids write something and offer it for approval and distribution. Not approval as to subject matter, but approval for distribution. If they reject it, can the kids appeal? Where is due process? You have to be able to go to someone at a higher level.

"There just isn't any good working arrangement between the schools and students who want to express themselves. There's a need for a working process to guard against the school being held responsible for libel and slander, and perhaps obscenity. If such a process can't be set up, the students will just go off campus, where the school has no control at all."

PHILIPS takes the view that there's no real problem, since the April Rising Star was approved for distribution and handed out both on anx school grounds.

"Considering the total amount of non-school material distributed by our high schools, we have had very few problems since the rules for student expression went into effect more than two years ago," he said.

More than 400,000 non-school newspapers have been handed out qal high schools in the past few years, he said.

"We are optimistic that any problems can be worked out if they are approached with the best interests ox in mind."

He declined to comment further on the issue, referring it toLouis Gordon, the deputy county counsel who advises local schools on legal matters.

Gordon said he believed that the Unified School District's guidelines are in agreement with state rules.

He said the main purpose of the rules was to see that material that causes student disruptions or degrades ethnic or religious groups was kept off campus.

"The three judges who helped the state Department of Education prepare the state guidelines felt you shouldn't have unlimited, unregulated distribution of anything coming on campus," Gordon said.

"There is also an attempt to have rules on orderly distribution so you don't have kids littering papers all over campus."

But Gordon said he believed that school officials hadn't objected to Rising Star's content, but to the way it was handed out.

"It would be ridiculous to say that on-campus conduct could be regulated and then to say student could completely violate those rules if they step one inch off the property,' he said.

The issue of how far off-campus school authority extends "would require a reasonable interpretation," Gordon said. "We use the term 'reasonable' all the time. In the end, it would be up to a judge to decide if our use was correct."

Mom held in death of infant

An Orange County woman was booked on a murder charge Saturday night in connection with the death of her eight-month-old son, sheriffs deputies said.

Deputies said Jennifer Dabney, 20, of El Toro, was arrested by investigators following the 6:50 p.m. death of her son Robert at Childrens Hospital in Orange.

Determination of a precise cause of death would be made by coroner's deputies, but the case "appeared to be child abuse," deputies said.

The woman was held on bail of $250,000.

$450 TV set stolen

All agencies toughen ocean oil spill policy

operating team is formed. The officer is expected to work closely with the news media.

In addition to the state's contingency plan, the Coast Guard has elaborate plans for handling ocean and harbor spills. In the past two years, in fact, the Coast Guard has "added an amazing amount of resources" to its environmental protection program, according to one officer.

A Coast Guard official said the state, moreover, has excellent liaison with the federal agency, and added that both have been highly cooperative in the Los Angeles-Long Beach area.

Under the Port and Waterway Safety Act, the Coast Guard has the power to assess administrative penalties against oil spill offenders. According to Lt. Cmdr. C.D. Morrison, the local Coast Guard office issues about 25 penalties a month — the average fine being about $1,000.

Last week, Los Angeles City Attorney Burt Pines' office said the City of Los Angeles also would take a tough stand against polluters.

A spokesman for Pines — Mike Steed — said the city attorney's office has started to keep statistics on its water pollution cases in Los Angeles habor and has advised its San Pedro office to criminal charges against all polluters within its jurisdiction.

Since July of last year, when Pines took office, the San Pedro office has brought — and won — 23 cases against water polluters in the harbor, said Steed.

Twenty-two defendants pleaded no contest and one pleaded guilty, he said. One additional case is pending.

The cases include actions against ships for both oil and industrial chemical spills, Steed added.

It's still too early to tell whether Pines' policy will have much effect on top of the Coast Guard's strict enforcement program. But observers are inclined to agree that it's likely to strengthen the Coast Guard deterrent.

The federal agency considers its program a pretty good deterrent as it is, what with the fact that it can — and does — impose a fine for every oil spill that comes to its attention. Moreover, the agency has the power to impose an additional fine of $10,000 in the event an offending ship fails to notify it of a spill.

Morrison said the agency's mandatory fines run from $750 to $3,500. The fines are considered civil penalties and are assessed by administrative rather than legal fiat.

In the 23 cases reported by Pines' office, the criminal fines have been relatively light (ranging from $100 to $500) and no jail time has been imposed on any of the violators. Thus far, the courts have been lenient because of the size and nature of the spills (they've been relatively small) and the fact that all have constituted first offenses.

But Steed said the attorney's office intends to ask for the stiffest possible penalties from now on.

Experts say the amount of oil poured or spilled into the world's oceans runs anywhere from five to 10 million tons a year — enough oil, at the least, to supply 75 million cars with 20 gallons each, according to the Audubon Society.

With very large tankers expected to be hauling additional oil into the two ports by 1977, when the Alaskan oil pipeline is scheduled to be completed, it would seem reasonable to suppose that the risk of spills would increase in the next few years.

But Donald A. Walsh, director of planning and research for the Los Angeles Harbor Department, said the inference isn't necessarily correct. For one thing, the increasing use of very large oil tankers gradually will reduce the number of oil vessels calling at the ports. Moreover, better navigational aids (both on and off shore) are likely to decrease the chances of collisions.

Coast Guard officials noted that their own abatement efforts should also help lessen the risk of spills. In July of this year, for example, the agency will begin enforcing new safety equipment regulations in addition to existing requirements.

The Coast Guard also runs two daily harbor patrols for oil spill detection purposes in the two ports. And twice a week it runs helicopter surveillance flights from Long Beach to Santa Barbara.

Two killed in auto crashes

Two persons were killed in Southland traffic accidents Saturday, Los Angeles and Orange County coroners' deputies said.

A Compton motorcyclist died when he was struck by a car on Atlantic Avenue at Lavinia Avenue in Lynwood.

Richard Archiquette, 36, of 15708 S. Butler Ave., was pronounced dead on arrival at St. Francis Hospital in Lynwood shortly after the 4:45 p.m. accident.

Details of the accident were not immediately available pending an investigation, but police said no arrest had been made.

Earlier in the day, a Costa Mesa woman was killed when she crossed a street between intersections and was struck by a car.

Louise M. Post, 81, of 334 Rochester St., was pronounced dead on arrival at Costa Mesa Memorial Hospital shortly after the noon accident. Police said she was walking home from a market when she crossed Santa Ana Avenue near Rochester Street.

Producer Levine leaves AVCO

NEW YORK (AP) — Joseph E. Levine, the producer who brought to the screen such award-winning films as "The Graduate" and "A Touch of Class," has announced his resignation effective June 30 as president of AVCO Embassy Pictures Corp.

Levine told directors of the corporation he wasn't happy as administrator of the 150-member organization and wanted to return to the freedom he enjoyed as an independent film producer.

Levine, 68, founded Embassy in 1936. AVCO acquired the operation from Levine for $40 million in 1968.

He will be succeeded as president by William E. Chaikin, now vice president and West Coast director of operations for AVCO Embassy.

Imagine, Buddy goes skiing

NEW YORK — Buddy Hackett sat melting away in the baking sun in Las Vegas recently in a tennis outfit and solemnly declared his intention to take off—not weight—but time. Ten weeks vacation, he said ... 2½ months ... to go skiing.

"I want to ski the last half of December, and all of January and February," Buddy said, a few minutes after he delivered himself of the opinion that Alan King's Tennis Classic at Caesars Palace "did for tennis what Richard Nixon did for politics."

Hackett's interest in skiing—especially in summer—was a little surprising.

"Do you plan to go to Switzerland?" this visitor timidly asked.

"NO! I ski in America," Buddy retorted. "You can't trust that Swiss snow. It's got holes in it like their cheese." Buddy reeled off the names of western ski spots in Colorado, Utah and Nevada that he'll visit.

He doesn't have much of an image as an outdoor man or athlete. We usually think of him as a talk show funnyman and night-club star, given to such gags as hitting a golf ball into the woods and emerging naked, muttering, "Damned termites!"

BUDDY HACKETT

"I play tennis the same way," Buddy said. "Before the match starts, I jump over the net. Only I don't make it. I get caught on the net."

HE ADMITTED readily that he's no champion skier. "I'm not a fast skier but I'm sure. Don't forget, when I fall—and I do—I don't have far to go. So I don't pick up much speed in my fall so I'm a slow faller. I played golf for years and it really wasn't much exercise so I decided on skiing."

It helps with his constant battle against weight which has led him to many diets.

"I have a cinderblock in my house and I pick it up and carry it around every morning. I say to myself, 'Do I want to carry this thing around with me all day long every day?'. It weights about 18 pounds and that's the excess weight I have to get rid of."

Buddy's on the verge of tycoondom. He's a vice president of the Del Webb Co. which owns the Sahara in Las Vegas where he stars. "I'm not a partner, I don't own any stock," he confesses openly. He admits getting older, more mature. He has seen his son Sandy arrive at college age, becoming a freshman at the University of Nevada in the fall.

"He went to Beverly Hills High but he almost didn't graduate — he didn't have a car," Buddy said.

Buddy will be back at Westbury Music Fair Sept. 2 with James Darren (whom he's going to take skiing).

"Jimmy doesn't sing very well—but when I work with him there are a lot of girls around the dressing room," he says.

They have frank talk around the dressing room and some of the ad lib dialogue on stage is franker. "People pretty much know my style and I have a big sign, 'No children of any age admitted.' One of our ad lib sessions was about sex. Jimmy asked me what happened with those three girls I was out with.

"I told him I was out with them till 6. He said '6 a.m.?' I said, '6 p.m.' He said, 'What happened?' I said, 'Nothing, to me. They wouldn't let me join them.' "

Bo Donaldson and Heywoods due at Knott's

Bo Donaldson and the Heywoods bring their chart-climbing hit, "Billy, Don't be a Hero," to the stage of the John Wayne Theater at Knott's Berry Farm Friday through Sunday.

Other entertainment includes the all-new Knott's Wild Animal Follies, Zoltan's Gypsy Puppets, dancing to the sounds of the Good Time Music Co. and the country and western music of Wild Oats.

Ecology people OK Expo '74, finally

SPOKANE, Wash. (UPI) — The National Audubon Society announced Saturday it is still unhappy about Expo '74's "pretensions to being an environmental exposition" but has decided to exhibit at the Spokane fair anyway.

When the World Environmental Exposition opened May 4, not one environmental group had been signed to participate in the fair, themed to "celebrate tomorrow's fresh, new environment."

Expo then offered free exhibit space and still got no takers. The feeling among environmentalists was that Expo was nothing more than a commercial trade fair with 48 domestic exhibitors, nine countries and an amusement park.

But the commercial success and mounting attendance has apparently changed environmentalists' minds, not about the fair, but about the audience it is drawing.

Saturday, the Audubon Society's western representative, Paul Howard, said his group has decided it should not pass up the chance to reach upwards of five million people who are expected to visit Expo.

Recently, Friends of the Earth decided it, too, would take Expo up on a piece of 800 square feet being offered. As one Friends spokesman put it "when you've got a lemon, make lemonade."

Howard said the Audubon Society exhibit is modeled on the one the society exhibited in 1972 at the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment at Stockholm, Sweden.

Featured are blow-ups of color photos from the society's magazine showing wildlife and scenic beauty.

Nanette superb, basks in 'Applause'

By DAVID LEVINSON
Staff Writer

Thanks to Nanette Fabray, and to its own considerable resident talents, the Long Beach Civic Light Opera is closing out its 1973-74 season with an unusually satisfying production.

The show is the 1970 Broadway musical Applause.

It bears traces of its origins as a vehicle for Lauren Bacall's musical debut. The singing requirements are relatively light. The acting requirements are relatively heavy.

There are no hit songs. The closest thing to a memorable tune is the title song, and anyone whistling it as he leaves the theater is likely to drift into "Cabaret" by the time he walks a half block or so.

ANYONE who can remember the lyrics — "Whatever you do you do better because you're doing it to the beat of applause" — can probably also tell you who was secretary of the interior under President Taylor. (Let's hear it for Thomas Ewing!)

But Miss Fabray is a superb actress as well as an accomplished singer, the story line is strong, and she and the others in the company manage to take a book that is largely routine conversation and make it seem like sparkling dialogue.

Derived from the movie classic All About Eve, the show is a handsome vehicle for Miss Fabray. She plays an aging star who unsuspectingly fosters the career of a sweet young thing who sharpens her talents at acting, sex and treachery in preparation for the magic day when old star Margo Channing will run out of gas.

The show also gives some fine acting opportunities to the supporting cast, and without exception the opportunities are seized.

As Eve Harrington, the smiling young Lady Macbeth of the piece, Polly Norby is exquisitely husky-voiced and beguilingly pretty. She is both coldly ambitious and sweet. Miss Norby handles the tricky combination so strongly she would overshadow any leading lady who didn't have Miss Fabray's exciting ability to move from jivey 1940's dancing to fiery fears of lost love and lost career.

Jack Ritschel is the model of a sadistic producer. John Wood is a believable lover for Margo but a slightly less believable director. As Buzz Richards, a showshop sort of playwright, James DePriest makes a convincing debut with the Long Beach company. As his wife, Gloria Maddock delivers a touching performance as a woman who betrays a friend only to be betrayed in turn.

There were fine performances, too, by Scott Salmon as Margo's hairdresser, by Laurie Herman as a stagestruck child of the New York theater, and by all her fellow show business gypsies. Their dances were brilliantly choreographed by Anita Mann and presented with not only flash but precision.

DAVID HUBLER was occasionally restrained in his conducting, but he still devotes to a ballad the energy and broad gestures the average conductor would save for Mahler's Symphony of a Thousand.

Kim Killingsworth's lighting designs were as effective as usual in setting mood, sometimes with a gentle subtlety that is rare in the theater. The fast-changing scenery was another expectedly strong feature.

The show is finally Miss Fabray's, though, and she dazzles and warms by turns in a performance that is fleshed with humanity as well as spectacle.

Applause is at the Jordan Theater, 6500 Atlantic Ave. Friday and Saturday performances are at 8:30 p.m. Sunday matinees are at 2:30.

Anaheim Gardens provides 'real community feeling'

INDEPENDENT PRESS-TELEGRAM and NEWS
REAL ESTATE

ROBERT BECKMAN, Real Estate Editor

BOTH SINGLE AND TWO-STORY TOWNHOMES READY FOR IMMEDIATE OCCUPANCY... at S & S - built Anaheim Gardens, Anaheim

Offering just 85 units clustered around a Cabana Club and recreational facilities, S & S Construction's Anaheim Gardens townhome community has proven its appeal to buyers seeking a smaller size community.

The community, on State College Boulevard in Anaheim, features two, three and four-bedroom townhomes in both one and two-story designs, priced from $28,950.

"Many of our buyers have commented on the intimate atmosphere at Anaheim Gardens," stated Mark Bader, vice president and general sales manager of S & S Construction. "In contrast to the trend towards large, spread-out townhome complexes, Anaheim Gardens offers a real community feeling to residents.

"This and the convenient location close to schools, freeways, employment centers, shopping, and Orange County's finest recreational areas are key features appealing to buyers."

Immediate occupancy is available in selected units at Anaheim Gardens, which features eight decorator-furnished models situated in a fully landscaped area accented by wide greenbelts and gas lanterns.

Standard features included in the price of every Anaheim Gardens townhome range from wall to wall carpeting, elegant draperies, wood shingle roofing, and hand finished natural wood cabinetry to marble pullmans, ceramic tile in kitchen and bath areas, and built-in kitchen with dishwasher.

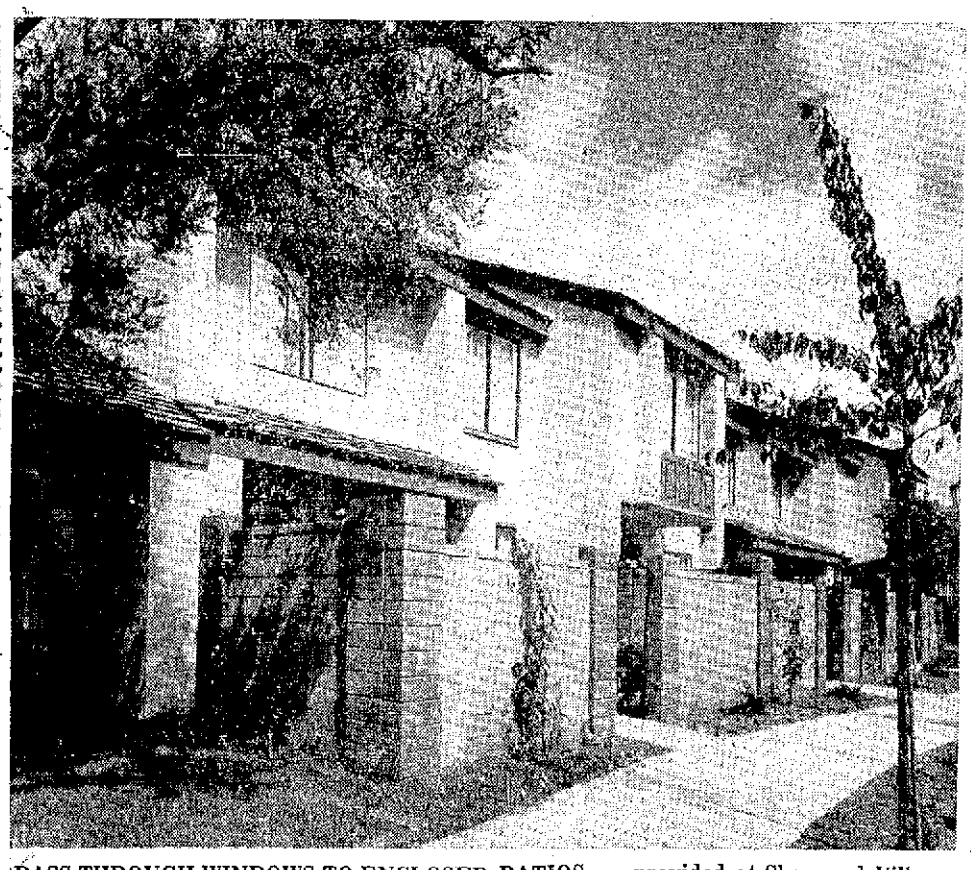

"Our homeowners are automatically members of the Cabana Club, with full use of the varied recreational facilities within the complex," Bader said. "These facilities include a large swimming pool, whirlpool, and showers. The maintenance of the area, as with the townhome exteriors, is handled by professional crews, eliminating the worry of upkeep."

All units offer distinctive wood and masonry trim, private enclosed garden patios, and complete exterior sidewall and ceiling insulation. Ranging in size from two-bedroom, one-bath units to four-bedroom, three-bath models, the townhomes emphasize living space. Optional room arrangements are available in selected models for enlarging bedroom suites.

Individual interior design counseling is available for homeowners through Shapell's Decorating Studios, which features professional color coordinators and a comprehensive line of home furnishings and accessories.

Open daily from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m., the Anaheim Gardens sales office is located at 934 Silkwood Lane. The community may be reached by taking the Riverside Freeway to State College Boulevard and Wagner Avenue. An alternate route is to take the Santa Ana Freeway to Katella Avenue, turning east to State College Boulevard and north to Wagner Avenue.

S & S Construction's parent firm, Shapell Industries, first began homebuilding 20 years ago.

Sherwood Village gives new lifestyle with leisure

Sherwood Village in Anaheim, an exclusive close-in walled community of elegantly designed townhomes, is attracting homebuyers seeking a leisurely lifestyle with every modern home convenience.

The cottage-like townhomes in two-story elevations, two and three bedrooms and up to 2½ baths are just a few blocks from Anaheim's busy entertainment center that includes Disneyland, the Anaheim Convention Center and scores of hotels, motels, restaurants and night clubs.

The Santa Ana Freeway is less than a mile away, leading to nearby Angel's baseball stadium, Knotts Berry Farm and other points of interest.

George Buccola, president of The Buccola-Pacific Company, builders, has successfully created an English village atmosphere in a self-contained environment that is set apart from the bustle and noise of nearby commercial traffic.

Within the grounds pathways from the various townhome clusters lead to an extensive recreation area past manicured greenbelts dotted with specimen trees and flowering plants, adding charm to the community and reflecting the builder's motif.

BELOW the huge clubhouse with its card and game rooms, is a large free-form heated swimming pool with cabana and therapy whirlpool. Decorator lamps around a terraced garden outside the clubhouse where owners and visitors can relax, dot the area for night activity.

A long list of modern design features and quality appointments are standard in the homes, each with its own air conditioning unit. Quality draperies, wall-to-wall carpeting, ceramic tile entryways, countertops and shower walls are included.

Decorated models are open daily from 10 a.m. at 913 W. Orangewood Ave., Anaheim. Exit the Santa Ana Freeway at Harbor Boulevard near Disneyland and drive south to Orangewood, then turn right to Sherwood Village. The model complex is between Harbor and West Street on Orangewood.

MASTER SUITES, DELUXE BATH ... at Sherwood Village

Tiled entry looks great

The generously proportioned contemporary homes of Brentwood Park, in the master planned neighborhood of quiet streets in Cerritos, are offered in 13 different exteriors and four distinct floor plans.

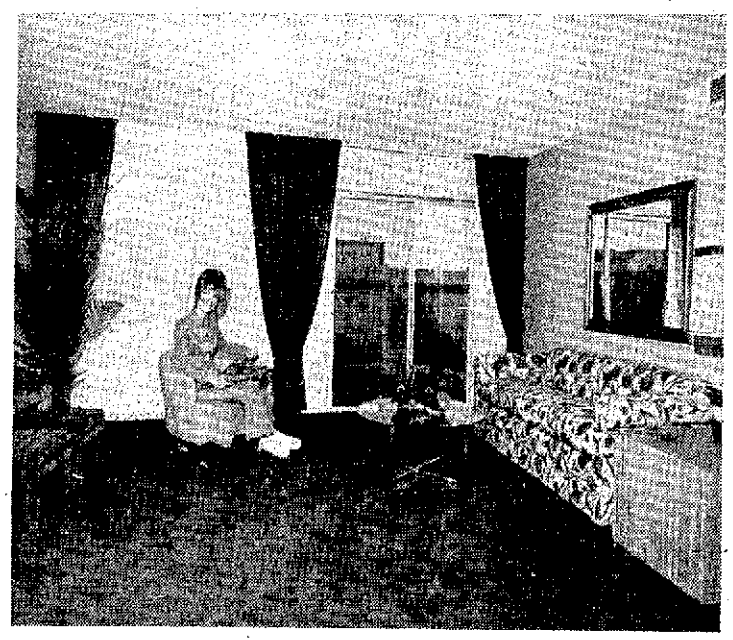

Brentwood Park is a community of single-family detached homes with numerous innovative interior design features and appointments. Raised tile entries, suspended staircases, sky lighted family areas and built in gas barbecues are indicative of the thoughtful planning that went into the homes.

Woodburning fireplaces have gas log lighters, and the country kitchens include range, double self-cleaning oven, automatic dishwasher, double sinks, disposal, hand finished cabinetry, a serving counter and luminous ceilings.

Ready for immediate occupancy, the stylish Brentwood Park dwellings include quality shag wall-to-wall carpeting, huge master suites with private deluxe baths and extensive wardrobe space. The builders and architects in individualizing the many elevations called for extensive use of picture windows, heavy timbers, shake shingle roofs and brick accents.

The spacious homes are being offered by Westport Home Builders, Inc., of Anaheim, and are presented at prices ranging from $46,900 to $60,900. Conventional financing is available on good terms.

Blueprints are being shown now at a special garage sales facility. Exit the Artesia Freeway at Bloomfield Avenue and drive north on Bloomfield to the first street, Lucus, then turn right to the "blueprint sale."

PARK WESTMINSTER UNITS ... include draperies

Park Westminster townhomes stylish

Good land planning by the De Ruff Development Co. of Newport Beach, builders and pioneers in condominium developments, assures maximum privacy for homeowners at Park Westminster.

The dwellings are priced from $24,990, with good conventional financing available at 7.9 per cent interest.

The close-in location of Park Westminster in Garden Grove, a well planned grouping of stylish townhomes surrounding a one-acre greenbelt park, is providing homebuyers with metropolitan convenience in an established residential area.

It is within easy driving distance of shopping centers and tennis courts, and close to major employment areas of Long Beach and Orange County.

NEARBY ARE schools and city-operated Woodbury Park with its elaborate playground facilities. And within the grounds, Park Westminster families have the exclusive use of a children's playground and wading pool, large swimming pool with cabana and a recreation room.

A homeowners association provides for all exterior maintenance throughout the development of 128 homes.

The one and two-story contemporary homes with two, three and four bedrooms include air conditioning in many of the dwellings, efficiency kitchens.

Furnished models display the six varied floor plans and innovative design features of the townhomes, and are open daily from 10 a.m. at 11273 Westminster Blvd., Garden Grove.

To reach the family community exit the Garden Grove Freeway at Euclid Street and drive south to Westminster. Then turn east a short distance to Park Westminster, between Euclid and Newhope Streets.

Uniqueness marks Smoke Tree units

Individuality highlights the Smoke Tree Townhome development just off Beach Boulevard in Stanton.

A project of Warmington Development, Inc., Smoke Tree's sales pace has exceeded the $2 million mark with over 75 per cent of the residences sold.

The townhomes are arranged so that each home is only partially attached to its neighbor. Where walls are attached, they are adjacent to non-living areas such as closets and stairwells.

Financing terms are excellent: 7.8 per cent with a 20 per cent down payment and only 8.25 per cent with a 5 per cent down. The homes are priced from $27,995.

With up to four bedrooms, two-and-a-half baths and 1,535 square feet of living area, the townhomes include living room with fireplace, a garden view family room, a kitchen with top-of-the-line built-in appliances, including a continuous cleaning oven as well as lifetime-lasting ceramic tile counters, luminous ceilings and custom cabinets.

Double enclosed garages with laundry facilities are an added touch.

The homes are designed so that the sleeping area of the family is separated from the day-to-day living quarters so as to provide maximum quiet and privacy.

Families who have already moved in are enjoying the heated pool, private clubhouse, jacuzzi.

Four decorated model homes are open daily from 10 a.m. to dusk at 12290 Briarwood Road, north off the Beach Boulevard exit from the Garden Grove Freeway. Drive north on Beach past Lampson Avenue to Catherine Avenue. Turn right on Catherine to Smoke Tree Townhomes in Stanton.

Warmington Development, Inc., a leading builder for over 40 years, has 4 other major developments: Smoke Tree Townhomes in Orange, Shadow Run single-family homes in Westminster and La Palma, and Pepperwood Townhomes in Anaheim.

Huntington Landmark's newest offering

Sales have opened again at Huntington Landmark. Five different floor plans are available in the project's second phase. Units in all-adult condominium community are priced from $27,490 with excellent conventional financing. Take either Magnolia or Beach Boulevard south from San Diego Freeway to Atlanta Avenue.

Idea: put two homes side-by-side

AP Newsfeatures

People in motor homes may have all the comforts of home, well almost, but they might miss having a permanent address and the feeling of having roots somewhere, unless it is a second home.

A 13-year devotee of a home on wheels, Richard A. Wolters suggests a solution. It involves building "a combination home" on a little piece of land that would house both the home on wheels and its owners from time to time. Facilities in the motor home would supplement the space in the house.

"It could be built in the solitude of a countryside or it can fit into the condominium scheme of real estate development," ventures Wolters, who provides sketches of the home in his book, "Living On Wheels."

A well-known personality in sporting circles and author of five books on dogs and one on sail planing, his current hobby, Wolters has put together a book that not only envisions a combination home, but provides tips on every aspect of a motor home, from buying and maintaining it to enjoying it to the fullest. He also supplies interesting tips on campground courtesies.

WOLTERS' combination house is estimated at 30 feet by 30 feet at an 11-foot height, perhaps at the garage and utility end which runs the length of the house for about a 10-foot width.

This plan would have a main room, a storage closet, a workroom-den, fireplace, tool shed. Architectural plans might vary using this basic concept, he points out. Outdoors, an easily maintained deck could provide charm.

Such a dwelling could be inexpensively built, perhaps a do-it-yourself project; but it should have an open plan that might provide for future room changes. A sliding door could separate the garage and main room and be adjusted to accommodate the door of the motor home so that it could be entered to use the bedroom, bath and kitchen facilities. As Wolters points out, you don't need two sets of everything. A sleep sofa in the main room of the house can provide for guests. And just think of the advantages of closing the motor home door with its unmade beds and messy kitchen when unexpected company arrives.

THE HOUSE could be planned for future conversion to a full cottage. Plumbing might be installed for a future bath in the hobby area. A kitchen might take over another area. He suggests heat and air-conditioning. In his opinion, in warmer climate, a heat pump combination furnace-air conditioner might do both jobs. The house might also have a clothes washer, dryer, small freezer and good storage space where a motor home traveler might stash season clothes.

Garage space should be figured on the basis of the largest motor home, Wolters insists. He had graduated from a small recreational camper to a large motor home, and it seems to be a natural progression.

Practically no one finds the perfect home on wheels, he contends. But bit by bit one adjusts the livability and solves the problems. Awareness helps in making your purchase. (Are wall cabinet corners rounded for safety? Do drawer handles protrude? Are curtains too close to the stove?) Layout comparisons in vehicles might be made. (Is the interior planned so that a social group can be comfortable? Can the cook be part of the scene?) Engineering errors might be observed. (Can you get the eight-foot refrigerator out of the six-foot door if you must, or was the vehicle built around it? It has happened.)

SOME solutions are born of aggravation. The Wolterses have anchored noisy stove parts with thin copper wire, built wooden holders for cups, stored foodstuffs in plastic containers, anchored ash trays, pipes and glasses, all in the interest of curbing noise and rattle. Storage savers include putting cushion covers on bed pillows for daytime use, learning to shower with very little water and using paper clips to keep paper towels from unwinding.

WHAT'S YOUR PROBLEM?

Saving for rainy day suddenly making sense

By DON CAMPBELL

Remember how your father used to insist that you put 5 cents of your weekly 25-cent allowance into a piggy bank "for a rainy day?"

What a drag! Who has "rainy days" at the age of eight?

But, as you get older, the advice makes more and more sense until suddenly — at mid-age — you realize that it's no longer a luxury (a bit of silliness), but a very real consideration.

MR. CAMPBELL:

I am a married man, 50 years old, earning $18,000 a year with $50,000 in savings (half in E bonds and half in 5 per cent savings accounts).

I have approximately $20,000 in life insurance, no debts and no children. We rent for $125 a month.

Based on my present salary my pension at 65 will be about $1,000 a month.

Would it be wise for us to purchase a $45,000 house we are interested in? Should we pay cash or mortgage a portion and invest the remainder? — Mr. M. C. (Allentown, Pa.)

ANSWER: This is a most peculiar time in your life to be asking me such a question. How many long, dreary, years have you had your life savings tied up in — of all things, E bonds and a flat savings account?

Why didn't you just sew the cash up in a mattress?

I have nothing, in particular, against E bonds except for the fact that the Treasury Department's attempts to keep them competitive with other avenues of investment have fallen flat on their face — you can beat the 6 per cent that E bonds pay at any bank in the country.

They're fine for the people who find it difficult to save and who can authorize the deduction of an E bond out of every weekly paycheck, but beyond that (forgive me for saying so, my Treasury Department) they're strictly for the ultra-conservative who don't mind seeing their investment shrink away at the rate of 1 or 2 per cent a year under the onslaught of inflation.

Now, then, about this house. What, in heaven's name, is driving you to the ownership of a $45,000 home at a time when — apparently — you are quite content in a $125-a-month apartment?

Granted, there are distinct income tax advantages in buying a home at your point in life since the interest on the mortgage is deductible. But whatever reason could you have?

You have no children and $45,000 implies a home of some size and substance.

I'm not — mind you — saying that it's necessarily a bad idea. It could be the best investment you've ever made (particularly so since, to date, your idea of a hot investment has been E bonds), but I am curious as to why it took the two of you so long to think of it.

Go ahead and buy it, if you wish, but abandon — for once and for all — the idea of paying cash for it.

Pay no more than $15,000 down and invest the balance of your $50,000 — $35,000, if my math is right — in a good mutual fund with at least a 7-year track record of good performance.

Mutual funds are, currently, in a funk and so, ironically, this may be the best time in the last 10 years to buy a good one — letting the cash dividends and capital gains accumulate.

Under normal circumstances (and, bless us all, we're due for a bit of normalcy here) the average mutual fund, over a 10-year period, should appreciate at an annual, compounded, rate of 10 per cent or more a year.

MR. CAMPBELL:

I would like to know what steps are involved in buying a house where the present loan can be assumed? — Mr. W. F. B. (Lake View, Ia.)

ANSWER: There's no great complication — the real estate broker handling the deal can, in 9 times out of 10, handle the whole thing.

This is where your broker should come in handy.

Optimism expressed for building starts

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Prospects for construction are bright in California, Arizona and Nevada this year with a strong second half more than balancing early-in-the-year doldrums.

So says Marshall C. Dennison, president of Associated Mortgage Cos., Inc. the Philadelphia-based national real estate financing and service organization is one of the nation's three largest mortgage banking firms with a portfolio exceeding $2 billion.

Dennison predicted that construction outlays for the three states should climb 51 per cent above the 1973 totals. He said California would be up 49 per cent, Arizona 47 per cent and Nevada 56 per cent.

The tri-state region is part of the semicircle pattern marking the country's hottest construction markets of the 1970s.

"THE thriving U-shape of the building industry ranges from the Northwest, down the Pacific coastline, across the Southwest and South and up the East Coast to North Carolina," Dennison said.

"Population influx into the tri-state area—about 1.3 million new residents since 1970—has created burgeoning demand for residential construction, both for sale and rental.

Dennison noted that in the current energy-aware economy builders are taking a fresh look at close-in housing to help workers curtail or eliminate commuting problems.

"Rehabilitation of existing facilities is expecially brisk in Los Angeles and San Francisco where older apartment houses—indeed, complete neighborhoods—are being revitalized for workers seeking residences nearer job sites," he said.

"NEW multifamily construction is also vigorous in the larger cities to help house quickly expanding populations."

He added that Phoenix is an example of "a Western boom town, '74 style," with construction thriving—both commercial and residential—to meet the need of recent migrants to Arizona.

Shopping center building is generally doing well in suburban area of the tri-state region with large malls — those offering a variety of stores and facilities—gaining in popularity.

"Over-all," Dennison concluded, "the forecast for the West is decidedly optimistic. Across the country, the area is viewed as a good place to live.

Best month ever for Walker & Lee

With sales of more than $50 million of properties, Anaheim-headquartered Walker & Lee, Inc. recorded its best monthly sales total in its 32-year history during April, President Frank R. Hart said.

During the month the firm sold 1,370 properties with a total value of $51.2 million, a 42 per cent increase in dollar volume compared to April, 1973.

Recording the largest gain was the firm's Resale Division, which sold $27.0 million of existing homes during the month, up 80 per cent over the same period a year ago.

Subdivision sales also increased significantly, reaching a total value of $24.0 million — an increase of $5.1 million over April, 1973.

HART ALSO noted that sales for the year are continuing at a record pace, with a total four-month dollar volume of $166.1 million — or $21.3 million ahead of 1973, the best year in company history.

Through the first four months of the year, the firm has sold a total of 4,509 properties — an average of 1,127 per month.

Walker & Lee is exclusive sales agent for more than 160 new home developments in five states, and operates 42 resale offices.

What realty boards are doing

LONG BEACH

Bob Brown, program chairman for the Long Beach District Board of Realtors meeting Tuesday, 7:30 a.m., at the Queen's Restaurant, announced the speaker as Bob Austin of Security Pacific Bank.

Austin's topic: "How to Avoid Postmortem Pandemonium."

Don Hazzard, membership chairman, said four Realtors and 22 Realtor associates will be inducted as members.

JACK SAXON, board president, has announced the board is endeavoring to eliminate the problem of graffiti in the commercial-industrial area.

"If graffiti is put on the side of a building and not removed, before long you will find an entire building in deplorable condition," Saxon said.

"If a window is broken and not repaired, before long you will find many more windows broken.

"Members of the board are attempting to discourage this practice and educate property owners to care for their property so that we no longer have these unsightly conditions.

Controversy dies down in A's clubhouse

Herb Washington finally comfortable in role

By DON MERRY
Staff Writer

The phone rang one afternoon in early March at an ABC affiliate station in Detroit and the caller, showing no signs of modesty, identified himself thusly:

"Hi, this is Charles O. Finley, owner of the two-time world champion Oakland A's."

The voice on the other end of the line was equal to the moment.

Herb Washington has as much business playing baseball as I have running the 100-yard dash.—Reggie Jackson.

"Hi," it said, "this is Herb Washington, the world's fastest human."

And so it came to pass that Herb Washington, who knew as much about baseball as Charles O. Finley knew about life in the ghetto, signed a rich contract to perform his specialty with the ascerbic A's — running.

Weaned in controversy and fed a rapacious diet of Finley's eccentricities, the A's reacted to Washington's signing with predictable and characteristic candor — not to mention resentment.

"It's a joke," said Gene Tenace. "This is going to cost someone who should be in the major leagues a job."

"Herb Washington has as much business playing baseball as I have running the 100-yard dash," noted Reggie Jackson who, like most of his teammates, usually shares his opinions with the world at large.

"If I stop getting hits," opined pinch-hitter Pat Bourque, "Herbie is going to be out of a job."

During the first week of the season, gifted left-fielder Joe Rudi opened an inning with a long single and manager Alvin Dark replaced him with Washington.

Rudi was incensed.

"I'm not gonna stop at first base any more," he snarled.

Herb Washington, now the world's second fastest human because of the emergence of someone named Ivory Crockett, sat in the visitor's dugout at Anaheim Stadium recently and reflected upon the sudden and dramatic twist in his life which lifted him from the relative sanity of a sportscasting job in Detroit and deposited him into the absurdity of living with the Oakland A's.

But Washington is not only fast. He is exceedingly human — affable, outgoing and garrulous. A genuine human.

And he has weathered his rocky and spite-filled introduction to baseball.

"A lot of the guys weren't crazy about the idea of my joining the team and some still aren't," he said. "But my attitude and character have helped, I think. I didn't try to come on like a smart alec kid who knew it all. I asked for help and asked to be a part of the team.

"I feel I've reached that level now and I feel that in due time I can help this team win a few games.

Observing the clubhouse lawyers in action, it becomes blatantly evident that Washington is now regarded as a legitimate member of the fraternity.

Bill North, the taciturn outfielder, was perched on the dugout steps, watching an interviewer pry comments from Washington.

"Hey, Ink Spot," he shot at Washington, "this is getting ridiculous. You're getting more ink than Reggie. I didn't know this team had two super stars."

"Why don't you go fix your bats," Washington retorted. "They're full of holes."

"Bill North and I have become close friends," Washington said. "We spend a lot of time together on the road and he has explained a lot of baseball to me. I don't know why we hit it off but I guess it might be because we both have some hot dog in us."

Bill North and I have become close friends. I guess it might be because we both have some hot dog in us.—Herb Washington.

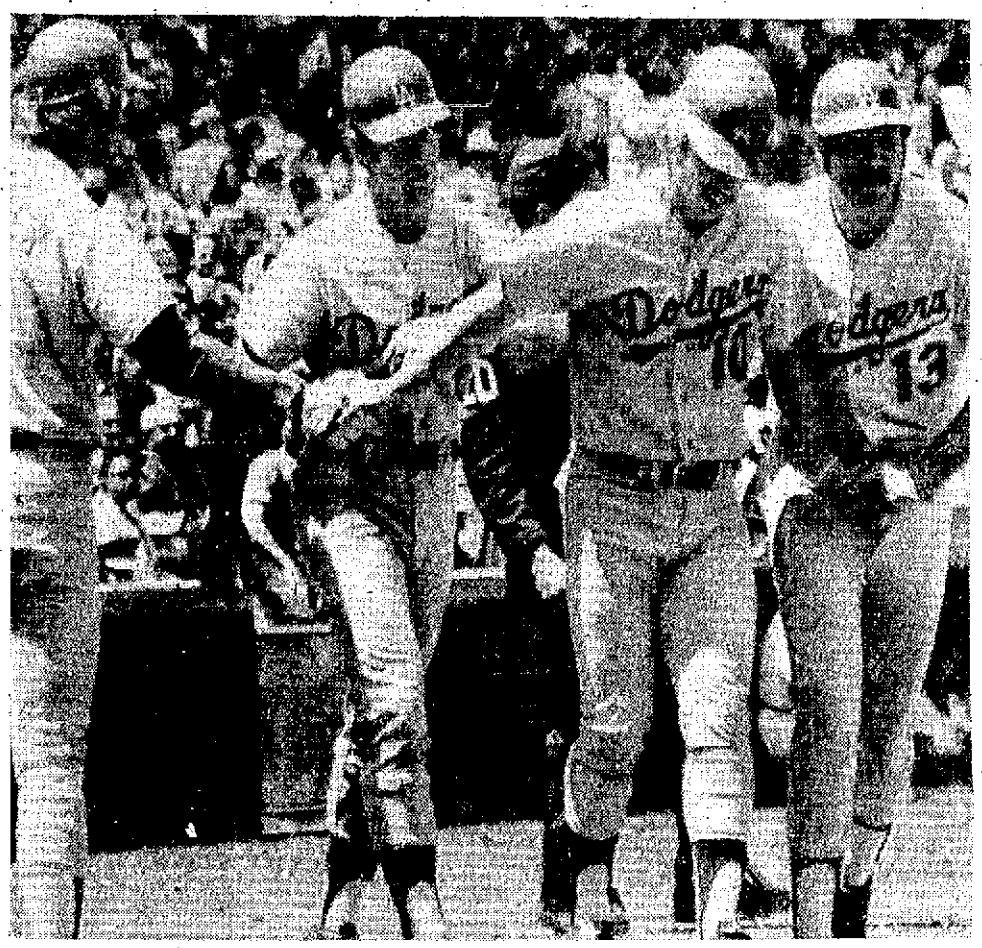

Washington is usually involved in the banter and the needling that is so much a part of the game.

"They get on me and I get on them

Quite a day for Mr. Cey

It was quite a day for Ron Cey in Chicago Saturday. Here he's greeted by Dodger teammates Steve Yeager (7), Steve Garvey and Joe Ferguson (13) after socking three-run home run in second inning. Two innings later Cey slapped two-run homer enroute to seven-RBI afternoon.

What can you Cey about Ron's day?

Record 7 RBIs in 10-0 rout

By GORDON VERRELL
Staff Writer

CHICAGO—The newsmen and radio-TV people flocked around Ron Cey Saturday afternoon, and with good reason.

He'd just powered two home runs, singled and driven in the massive sum of seven runs—a Los Angeles Dodger record—to personally support the five-hit pitching of Andy Messersmith as the O'Malleys ransacked the Chicago Cubs, 10-0, before 19,558 fans at Wrigley Field—as well as a national television audience.

Cey answered all the usual questions—the ones about what kind of pitches he hit, how he hit them, what pitch he was looking for, what he had for breakfast, etc., etc., etc., —and when it was over, he sat down, grinned and said:

"For the first time I wasn't asked about all the other third basemen. That's good. I guess I've arrived."

Hallelujah!

No more will we have to ask how many guys have played there since the club moved West—it's 47 —and wonder what in the world ever became of Lee Walls, Marv Breeding, Bart Shirley, Ducky LeJohn, et al.

DODGER OF DAY

RON CEY drove in seven runs with two home runs and a single in 10-0 victory over Chicago.

Scribble down The Penguin and forget it.

"I was asked about the third base jinx all the time, too much, but maybe it's the end of it," Cey said after his biggest day in the majors.

His seven RBI jumped his season count to 42 and the Dodgers, incredibly, now have the National League's 1-2-3 RBI men: Steve Garvey with 46 and Jimmy Wynn and Cey, each with 42.

They also have an eight-game lead again in the Western Division after their fourth successive victory, sixth in their last seven and 19th in their last 24.

Only three L.A. Dodgers had ever driven in as many as six runs in a single game—Frank Howard, Ron Fairly and Andy Kosco—and until Cey did it Saturday, no one had ever driven in seven.

The all-time Dodger record for RBI is nine, set in 1950 by Gil Hodges on the day he hit four homers in Brooklyn.

"I've had some good games," Cey said, "but this is easily my most productive."

Cey also turned in the day's top defensive play, robbing the Cubs' Jose Cardenal of a hit with a diving grab in the fourth inning. At the time the Cubs had a runner at third, thus preserving

Ryan loses no-hitter in 8th

Tigers tamed on 2 hits

By DON MERRY
Staff Writer

Nolan Ryan almost pitched his annual no-hitter against the Detroit Tigers Saturday night.

Instead he was obliged to content himself with a brilliant, if erratic, two-hitter as he pitched the Angels to a 4-1 triumph.

Ryan is baseball's unpolished gem—its diamond in the rough.

One moment he is unchallenged master of his art, throwing with rare velocity. The next he is a struggling, confused pitcher, attempting with little success to locate the strike zone.

It is this Jekyll and Hyde approach that someimes works to Ryan's advantage in keeping opposing hitters constantly wary and ill-prepared.

Ryan held the Tigers without a hit for seven innings and the drama mounted at the Big A for the delicious benefit of 16,481. They were roaring on every pitch in the seventh when he set the side down in order, striking out the last two men he faced.

In the eighth, shortstop Eddie Brinkman led off with a hard grounder to short that Dave Chalk juggled and then threw hurriedly to first, his throw pulling rookie John Doherty off the bag. Chalk was cited with an error.

The next batter, Mickey Stanley, took the air of anticipation out of the evening when he lined a clean single to left-center, the ball eluding a desperate leap by Chalk by about one foot. Brinkman, who had advanced on a wild pitch, scored on the play to deprive Ryan of a shutout, too.

Detroit's second hit was a two-out single by Al Kaline in the same inning.

"I thought I had a shot at it," Ryan said in the afterglow of his seventh victory, one which put him ahead of last year's pace when he was 6-6 at this time. Ryan stands today at 7-5.

"I think those first four innings probably cost me. I threw too many pitches."

The official count was 150, 85 of which were strikes.

Ryan wound up with 11 strikeouts but he also walked eight, hit a batter and uncorked a wild pitch.

He leads the major leagues with 110 strikeouts and 83 walks.

"I don't feel that I'm ahead of last year," he sighed. "I'm not making the progress I thought I was capable of but I'm throwing as well as I was last year. Remember, I didn't really get going unhphe last month and a half."

Ryan pitched two no-hitters last season—one of them against Detroit in Tiger Stadium when he struck out 17 and prompted Norm Cash to comically advertise his team's frustration by bringing a piano leg to the plate with him in the ninth inning.

The Tigers gave every appearance of being overmatched again but Ryan said he didn't feel that way.

"You don't look effective when you are always behind in the count like I was," he reasoned.

The Angels gave Ryan all the ammunition he needed with three runs in the first inning when the Tigers tossed the ball around like it had leprosy.

Arriola sets national teen record in mile

By FRANK BURLISON

Saturday's Long Beach Track Classic drew some of the Southland's top track and field names, but the athlete who drew the biggest raves is a relative newcomer to the scene.

Jim Arriola, a 15-year-old Gahr High sophomore, captured the spotlight at Long Beach State by winning a heat of the mile run with a record-setting performance.

The 5-7, 135-pounder outkicked a strong field to break the tape in 4:08.8—nearly 10 seconds faster than his previous best.

"I was aiming for the national 15-year-old record for the mile which was 4:15.7," he said of his accomplishment. "I was glad to see that I was running against some fast runners who would push me to my best."

There was a touch of disappointment in his voice. He was hoping to crack the Gahr record of 4:08.6, set a few years ago by his brother Ed, now a 4:02-miler at Arizona.

Jim ran the final lap in 59.8 seconds after taking the lead for the only time with 660 yards to run.

"I was just hoping not

Crockett upset by Quarrie in slow 9.4

BERKELEY (AP) — Jamaican Don Quarrie upset U.S. sprint stars Steve Williams and Ivory Crockett in a photo-finish 100-yard dash Saturday and scored an easy victory in the 220 to steal the show at the Kennedy Games track and field meet before a crowd of about 1,000.

The 23-year-old University of Southern California student won the 100 in 9.4 seconds and was a 20.7 victor in the 220, an event which Williams and Crockett passed up.

Crockett, recently crowned "world's fastest human," took his third-place finish gracefully.

"I had to come down sometime and it happened to be this meet. I needed to lose," he said.

Crockett also said he leaned too early, mistaking a chalk line on the track for the finish line. Quarrie had already edged past him at that point.

Maren Seidler of Chacago's Mayor Daley Youth Foundation team provided another highlight of the meet when she broke the American women's shot-put record for the third time this season with a toss of 56 feet, 7 inches. It was 5½ inches over her one-week-old record.

Southern California record holder teenager Mary Decker set the first meet record of the day when she won the women's 440 in 54.3, and San Jose policeman John Powell established another when he captured the discus with a toss of 215 feet.

Powell's mark was almost six feet over the meet and stadium record set by Tim Vollmer last year. But it was short of the 223-4 he threw at Modesto which stands as the best performance in the world this season.

Shotput world record holder Al Feuerbach of the Pacific Coast Club of Long Beach, won his specialty with 69-11, beating rival George Woods byseven inches. Both had competed at Wichita, Kans., on Friday, with Feuerbach scoring another narrow victory in the U.S. Track and Field Federation meet.

Host University of California scored its first victory in the six-year history of the meet when its 440 relay team composed of three football players and hurdles specialist McKinley Moseley won in 40.0 seconds. The Philadelphia Pioneers team, with Crockett leading off, was second in 41.1.

Kathy Schmidt of Long Beach won the women's javelin event with a toss of 198-1.

Knaub upsets Tully in PV

BAKERSFIELD(Special)—Jim Knaub of Lakewood High is the state's new high school pole vault champion.

Knaub, relegated to the role of second fiddle all season while Millikan counterpart Mike Tully hogged all the headlines, shockingly upset Tully Saturday night at the 56th California Interscholastic Federation track and field championships to annex the 1974 crown.

Both the frkmoore League rivals cleared the same winning height of 15 feet, 6 inches, but Knaub cleared it on his first attempt while Tully took two tries.

Each had three misses at 16 feet.

Knaub, who had defeated Tully only once earlier this season, in an indoors meet when the latter had a sore ankle, was "in shock" Safter his timely victory, according to Millikan coach Dick Rodgers.

"He thought he was lucky just to make the finals," Rodgers said. E AND Jim, though, just like they've had all year."

Tully's best this season was 16-4, while Knaub's winning height equaled his previous high effort.

It was Tully's first defeat in major competiton. Both vaulters will compete in prep invitational meets this summer.

Two marks set by Wohlhuter

WICHITA (UPI) — World-record holder Rick Wohlhuter of the Chicago Track Club toppled two meet records Saturday night at the 12th United States Track and Field Federation meet at Cessna Stadium.

Wohlhuter led a field of 10 runners across the line in the mile run with a record shattering 3:55.1. He managed to break the 1,500 meter mark along the way with a time of 3:39.7.

His mile run puts him seventh on the all-time United States listing and 16th in the world for all-time bests. The old federation record, 3:56.4, was set in 1965 by Bob Day.

Wohlhuter led five other runners across the finish line under four minutes. Len Hilton of the Pacific Coast Clubof Long Beach was second in 3:56.7.

Tommy Haynes of Middle Tennessee soared 53 feet, 6 1-2 inches to capture the triple jump. John Craft of Chicago was second with a leap of 52 feet, 10 1-4 inches.

Jim Bolding, former Oklahoma State star now running for the Pacific Coast Club, won the intermediates with a clocking of 50 seconds flat.

Randy Smith of Kansas University upset Dwight Stones of the PCC in the high jump. Both jumpers made 7 feet, 2 inches but Smith was declared the winner over the world record holder on the basis of fewer misses.

John Halberstadt of the PCC broke the meet record in the three-mile run with a sparkling 13:22.5.

Stan Vinson of Eastern Michigan toured the quarter mile in 46.7, just edging Dennis Schultz of the PCC.

right and never stopped running until he had crossd home plate. Rightfielder Jim Northrup's return throw to the infield wound up in foul territory behind third base and when leftfielder Ben Ogilvie retrieved it he threw errantly, too, permitting Doyle to score.

Doherty kept the inning alive against loser Joe Coleman with a walk and Joe Lahoud slammed his fifth homer, a towering shot that easily carried beyond the right field fence.

A walk to Ellie Rodriguez and Chalk's double made it 4-0 in the seventh and Ryan was breezing.

Not to mention struggling a little, too.

Any other way and it wouldn't be Nolan Ryans way.

ANGEL ANGLES: John Doherty, te 22-year-old first baseman recalled earlier in the week from Salt Lake City, made his major league debut Saturday night...The Tigers are without the services of slugger Willie Horton who is nursing a sore right leg...Horton leads Detroit in homers with 12 and RBI with 31...Hottest Angel hitter during the month of May was outfielder Mickey Rivers who batted .311...By some strange quirk of fate the Angel Front Office Staff managed to defeat the Writers, 9-5, in one of sport's great upsets Saturday afternoon in the first Hall of Shame game of the season. A rematch is due in August with the Writers prohibitive favorites, of course. ..The series and the home stand conclude today at 2 with Woody Fryman dueling rookie Frank Tanana of the Angels. It's also Disneyland Fun Day.

Is Joe Namath quitting football?

By DAVE ANDERSON
New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Joe Namath might not play football anymore. If he retires as a quarterback, he probably would accept a multimillion-dollar offer from the American Broadcasting Company to replace Don Meredith in its Monday night football booth. He also would focus on being an actor in films and TV shows.

"I just don't honestly know yet what I'm going to do," he said.

Joe Namath isn't trying to be evasive. He's trying to make a decision. But the inflections in his voice over the telephone from his Bachelors III restaurant in Tuscaloosa, Ala., betrayed his inclinations. When he spoke of returning to the New York Jets for his 10th season, his voice was flat, almost uncaring. When he spoke of the takeover of Charlie Winner as the Jets' coach, he sounded disenchanted. When he spoke of the New York Stars, who hold the World Football League negotiations rights to him, he sounded disinterested. When he spoke of the ABC offer, he sounded agreeable to discussing a "business" deal. But when he spoke of being an actor, he sounded enthused.

Joe Namath lives on enthusiasm. Once his enthusiasm for football prompted his "guarantee" that the Jets would win Super Bowl III but now his enthusiasm has transferred to a virtual guarantee that he'll succeed as an actor.

"I'm excited about being an actor," he said, "I know I can do it well. I was in three movies a few years ago but I was still on a learning level. I didn't know what I was doing. I hadn't taken any acting lessons. Anything that I've ever done, I was taught. I did three movies without a lesson. I took some acting lessons privately in New York last year and now I know I can be a good actor."

Joe Namath doesn't know if he'll report to the Jets' training camp next month, assuming the National Football League labor dispute is resolved by then.

"I'm not solid in my mind that I'm even going to training camp," he said. "But if I do, I want to be ready so I've been approaching it as if I were going. I've been working out for a couple of months. I've been throwing a football lately. Even if I go to training camp, I'm not sure I'll want to stay there. I'm dubious about playing football. I'm not worried but I'm dubious. I know Charlie Winner and I don't know if I want to be in a situation of total football. My life is not there anymore. I want to play but I'm not sure if I want to play under those conditions. Nothing helps my day more than seeing Emerson Boozer or Jerome Barkum smile. But it sounds to me like the start of a new regime. I don't know if I'm willing to go through the mental aggravation. I hear things and I see things."

What he saw was the letter that Winner wrote recently to all the Jet players.

In it, the new coach demanded "100 per cent of your time and attention to football," expected "your full concentration" and declared that "permission will not be granted for late reporting" to training camp, one of the favors that the quarterback often was granted when Weeb Ewbank was the Jets' coach.

"I'll go out and do my job," the quarterback said of Winner's letter, "but I don't need any jive." He apparently doesn't need the New York Stars either. Once upon a time, when several of his friends hoped to obtain the Birmingham franchise, the former Alabama idol appeared interested in the WFL. But no longer.

"If I play," he said, "I want to play for the Jets but if I don't play this year, I don't think I'll ever play again."

Ewbank, now solely the Jets' general manager, and Winner rejected ABC's request that Namath be a TV analyst on the weekly Monday night game this season after having spent his Sundays as the Jets' quarterback. Namath's attorney, Jimmy Walsh, wanted him to do both but Namath didn't. Not even when ABC offered to supply him with a private jet whenever it would ease his travel schedule to and from his Jets' priority.

"I had a syndicated TV show in 1969 that I gave up because I didn't enjoy doing both—playing football on Sunday, then taping the TV show the next day," he said. "When you're a football player, sometimes you just don't feel like even getting up on Monday, much less doing a TV show. And on Sunday, it's in the back of your head, just knowing that you have to do it. After a Sunday game, you usually need Monday just to recover."

Walsh is whispered to have opened negotiations with ABC by asking for a $10-million contract for Namath over 10 years.

"If you don't ask for something, you can't get it," Walsh commented. "They responded with a very, very substantial offer."

Walsh also spoke of TV acting offers that "come in all the time" for his client, a guest star on many TV shows.

Cynics and skeptics will dismiss the situation as simply another of Joe Namath's threats to retire. Perhaps he will resume his career as a quarterback. But from the sound of his voice, his zest for football appears to have departed. He turned 31 years old Friday and he sounded weary of football, even with his $250,000 annual salary.

"When you get to the point where you know you can do even better financially, that's something you have to think about," he said. "And another thing, I'm tired of lifting weights for my knees. I don't like lifting weights. I never did."

to fall too far behind at the beginning and then run as hard as I could the final lap," he said.

Arriola is being brought along slowly by Gahr coach Stve Bruhns.

"I ran in the sophomore CIF 3-A finals rather than the varsity because Coach Bruhns thought we had a chance to win the team championship. I wanted to run varsity and I think I could have placed at least third in the State meet at Bakersfield."

Only eight days shy of his 16th birthday, Arriola lost only two races this season—both in the two-mile. He says the mile is his best race.

He had never run faster than 4:18.2 before Saturday's mile. He won the CIF Masters meet sophomore mile and took second in the two-mile while leading Gahr to the Frosh-Soph title.

"I'd eventually like to go under 4:05," he said. "I'll probably go to the National AAU Junior Championships in Gainesville, Fla., later this month and, hopefully, I'll be selected to the national junior team and face the Russians this summer."

Though Arriola was a near-unanimous choice as athlete of the meet, there were a number of other noteworthy performances.

Jim Kemp of the Beverly Hills Striders won a heat in the 100 at 9.6, was a 220 runnerup in 20.6 and ran the third leg on the Striders' victorious mile relay team.

HANK HOLLINGWORTH

Volleyballers left in limbo

A red-hot controversy is swirling at Millikan High School, and while it is not the custom of this writer to get involved in prep battles—I learned many moons ago one lives longer that way—the issue is one that could be an indication of things to come on the prep athletic scene.

First, two questions:

1. Why can't a Long Beach high school CLUB (the word is emphasized because it is not a league team) participate in the CIF playoffs just because the club's sport isn't included in Moore League competition?

2. Why was this sports club in the CIF playoffs a year ago, but denied participation this year?

The enigmatic questions were prompted by concerned parents of the Millikan High School Volleyball Club members, whose case was presented thusly by spokesman Leonard N. Julian.

"The CIF volleyball playoffs began last week for 16 teams," began Julian. "However, Long Beach's lone representative was not there. Not because it wasn't good enough, but because local school administrators ruled it out. Were the administrators worried about money, concerned about CIF rules or worried about setting a precedent? As parents, we wonder.

"The Millikan Volleyball Club has an approved school charter. In other words, it was accepted by the school just as a math, chess, ski or science club is accepted. It should NOT be confused with a Moore League TEAM!"

"IT WAS UNDERSTOOD," continued Julian, "this group would pick up games with other schools on a freelance basis, just as it did last year, and that it would compete in the CIF playoffs as a freelance club, again just as last year.

"However, a week before the CIF tournament, it received word from the CIF that coach Leo Apel's petition for inclusion in the playoffs had been rejected. It could not compete because the school—in this case principal Clarence Wood—did not recognize it as a school club.

"Further investigation revealed that a CIF official had contacted Mr. Wood and asked him if Millikan had a volleyball club. The principal stated it had no recognized volleyball TEAM. I'm playing with words because that is the way the game was played. Thus the CIF had no other course but to reject the coach's petition.

"Last year the Millikan club competed on a freelance basis in both the CIF playoffs and the National AAU Jr. Championship. At that time it had been together for only six weeks. It did not place in the CIF, but two boys made the all-CIF team. The club finished fourth in the Nationals, however, and three boys were named to the all-America squad. This year only one boy was lost through graduation, thus the same team figured to be stronger. But we never will know."

JULIAN CLAIMED THAT "due to the club's fine showing last year, coach Apel asked about it being included in the Bay League as the Moore League doesn't play volleyball. Mr. Wood did go to the Moore League with that proposal, but was turned down in October and again in November.

"It is sad that these boys AND girls could not compete in the playoffs because for some of them it meant seven years of hard work and dedication down the drain.

"These kids just didn't pop up overnight with highly developed skills. It was no accident that Long Beach State had a women's national championship volleyball team or that Long Beach City College won the state championship. The City of Long Beach is becoming a volleyball power because of the tremendous interest here in the sport.

"Most of the young people we are speaking about have been developed in the Long Beach Recreation and Parks system. People such as Katie Stone (Whaley), Henry Zimmerman (El Dorado) and Dick Weston (Pan American) know that their job is serving our youth and their response is a positive one."

SPOKESMAN JULIAN FELT the saddest part of this matter "was the way the school administration acted. Had Mr. Wood stated the simple fact that the Millikan group was chartered by the school, the club would have been included in the playoffs. He attempted to pass the buck to the CIF, arguing that a club team would not be accepted. But there were four club teams from other schools in the playoffs!

"Our final point of dispute is the matter of the Moore League not recognizing volleyball as a sport. Mr. Neil Philips, superintendent of secondary education, used this rationalization against the Millikan club. But we asked the league to participate in CIF volleyball and it refused because the league doesn't play volleyball.

"We accept that, but the club is a legally chartered school club and, therefore, nt answerable to the Moore League.

"Money was not a problem, either, because the club didn't cost Millikan one cent. The coach donated his time and parents and boosters took care of uniforms, transportation and fees.

"The Millikan Volleyball Club wants to compete with other schools on a freelance basis with no interference from the Moore League so next year we intend to charter a volleyball club at Millikan, playing in all the tournaments possible and pointing for the CIF playoffs and National Jr. AAU competition.

"If the charter is refused, legal counsel will be retained and suit filed against the school district. Administration representatives have told us what rules we must follow. We intend to discover what rules the district, Moore League and Millikan must follow. As it stands, there is a definite lack of consistency and blurring of jurisdiction regarding chartered school clubs."

PRINCIPAL WOOD, who also is president of the Moore League this year, had this response:

"In answer to question No. 1, the Moore League took the position not to field volleyball teams, thus the Millikan Volleyball Club couldn't be in the CIF playoffs because it would violate CIF rules which specify that a team must be recognized by the school's league.

"As for No. 2, the CIF only this year put in the rule that only teams from leagues which recognized a sport would be accepted for playoffs.

"I had no authority to make the statement that the Millikan Volleyball Club was chartered by the school. It may be true that a principal would have to stipulate a charter, but I couldn't in face of the Moore League decision. I certainly didn't attempt to pass the buck to the CIF, either."

Wood was asked why the Moore League didn't recognize volleyball and field competitive teams as in football, basketball, etc.

"It's a matter of cost for the whole league," replied Wood. "Maybe one school could make it, but not all. We've discussed this at length and it boils down to the fact that all school districts are trying to reduce athletic costs. In the future there may be more reductions in athletic programs, too, both because of costs and the energy crisis."

Dolphin kicker best remembered for infamous pass

Garo promotes World Cup soccer

"I think I know more about football than some kids that were born here ... more than some reporters. If you sit with coach Shula every day for four years, it's an education." — Garo Yepremian.

It's not true that all foreigners look alike, because Garo Yepremian bears little resemblance to his older brother Krikor.

Krikor, in a small luncheon group at a restaurant near L.A. International Airport, is the one wearing the tie with dolphins jumping through goalposts, something a tie salesman would never wear.

Krikor also is the one with hair.

Garo is the Dolphin that kicks footballs through goalposts. He celebrates his 30th birthday today but is not in the least disturbed that his hairline has receded into the end zone.

"I didn't have any more hair than this 11 years ago," he says, patting his fuzzy crown. "I worried about it — for three or four months. Then I decided, well, I'm the same person, except I don't have any hair on top of my head.

"You know what they say: If you're losing it in front it's because you think too much. If you're losing it in back it's because you're sexy. But if you're losing it in both places, you just think you're sexy."

THE LITTLE ARMENIAN from Cyprus could quote such adages in English, Armenian, Turkish or Greek, but these days he is communicating mainly in English to promote the closed-circuit telecast of the World Cup soccer finals from West Germany. The Forum will show — "live and in color" — 16 games on 11 dates from June 13 until July 7. Half of the games will start at 8 a.m. That's in the morning, PDT, so it's obvious that the promoters have considerable confidence in the quality of their product.

They predict that 800 million people will see the matches, more than witnessed the moon landing or all eight of the Super Bowls, which brings us to Yepremian and the long-held American view that soccer is a dull sport.

Garo says, "The American people can be led very easily by reporters and broadcasters. They even led the public to believe that football was dull. So changes were made. I wonder what they'll find to talk about now."

Some fans might find it difficult to take Garo seriously. While contributing a field goal and five extra points to Miami's two successive Super Bowl victories, he is most remembered for his infamous pass that gave the Washington Redskins their only touchdown in Super Bowl VII.

"I hope it'll carry on for another 10 years," he says cheerfully. "The more they talk about it, the better it gets — and if they don't talk about it, I bring it up myself."

CLEARLY, Garabed Sarkis Yepremian has few hangups and is conceded to be an expert on necktics, soccer, foreign language and premature baldness. He is annoyed, though, if held to be less than expert in football.

Garo was the inspiration for Norm Van Brocklin's famous remark that the best way to discourage the rise of field goals would be to "tighten the immigration laws."

"That was eight years ago," Garo recalls, "when he was coaching at Minnesota and I was with the Detroit Lions. I kicked six field goals and we beat them, 32-31."

The feat set a National Football League record, later tied and finally broken by St. Louis's Jim Bakken with seven. But Garo's mark of four in one quarter still stands.

"Now Van Brocklin has changed his mind because he has a kicker like me," Garo says. "Also, his family came from Europe. For a Dutchman to say they should tighten the immigration laws ... well, his parents might have been sent back."

GARO BECAME a U.S. citizen last Fourth of July and is no less a student of American football than his peers. He has studied and researched the history of the game. He attends team meetings regularly.

"I've been in the sport since 1966 when I came to the country, and every day I've been sitting in a meeting listening to a coach give a lecture.

"Especially if you sit with coach (Don) Shula every day for four years, listening to the lectures and watching the films, it's as if you've been going to college for four years and majoring in football.

"You learn a lot of things the average person doesn't know. I think I know more about football than some kids that were born here ... more than some reporters."

Yepremian was raised playing soccer on the island of Cyprus, where his parents sent him and Krikor to the American Academy school.

"It was pretty expensive compared to the other schools," he says, "but it was a better education."

HE COULD AFFORD it not only because his father was a salesman — "He wasn't that good a salesman" — but because his mother, "worked as a seamstress until midnight to send me and my brother to that school."

When Krikor graduated, he was sent to the U.S., where he attended Indiana University. Garo, four years younger, later went to play amateur soccer in England for six years, then turned down a professional offer to join his brother in Detroit.

Krikor had been watching American football and thought Garo could do what a handful of other soccer-style kickers were doing. Lion coach Harry Gilmer gave him a tryout and signed him, but when Gilmer was fired new coach Joe Schmidt made longtime teammate Wayne Walker his No. 1 kicker.

"Wayne made," Garo sniffs, "5 out of 15 that year." Eventually, Garo was cut and admits, "I had a tough time for a year and a half. My parents had come to the states and I'd put a down payment on a house for them, but I couldn't make the payments. Nobody would give me a chance. That's when I started making the ties."

ONE DAY GARO ran into Detroit vice-president Edwin J. Anderson, who offered to write letters to a few NFL clubs. Shula's was the only reply.

"Then when I went to Miami there was a players strike," Garo recalls. "I couldn't go to camp and I couldn't afford to go home. My brother was sending me money every other day for two weeks."

RICH ROBERTS

Yepremian's situation picked up after that and now he is on top, flashing good clothes, Super Bowl rings and easy smiles. He has three tie stores around Miami and a home three blocks from that shared by Krikor and his parents.

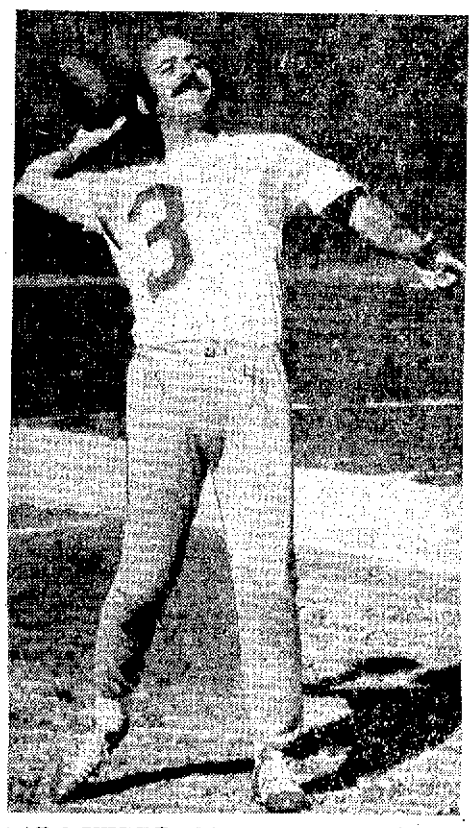

"We see each other every day. We are a very close family. My money is theirs."

Garo's other family will be breaking up after this season. Perhaps a half-dozen Dolphins are going to the World Football League. Garo could have gone, too.

"The Jacksonville Sharks offered me a multi-year contract," he says, "but the Dolphins made me a good offer, too, so I signed with them."

He is not discouraged by the rule changes affecting his role seriously, not even kicking off from the 35-yard line instead of the 40, which means he might be required to make a tackle once in a while.

"I feel bad for the guys that are going to be coming towards me," Garo says, stretching to his full 5-8 and 175 pounds. "I don't want to hurt anybody."

Grand old game remains untainted in Wrigley Field

By GORDON VERRELL
Staff Writer

CHICAGO—"Tenn-shun! Tenn-shun, please!" 88-year-old Pat Pieper shouted into the handheld antique microphone.

"Here are the lineups for today's ball game..."

Thus began another day at Cubs' Park, for 58 years the home of Chicago's National League baseball team.

In a league where plush, new ballparks abound, where 11 of the 12 stadiums were constructed since 1960, Cubs' Park, known since 1926 as Wrigley Field, is a monument to the past.

Once advertised as the most beautiful park in the majors, mostly because of its vine-covered outfield walls, Wrigley Field now leaves all that for the antiseptic stadia around the country.

The name of the game here is baseball. They promote it in the grand old way, too, with kids' days, ladies' days and knothole gangs.

There's only one guy who ever throws out the first ball, and that's the umpire, not the president of the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

The closest thing to a pre-game rock group, a hot item in some parks, is Cubs' infielder Carman Fanzone every now and then playing the national anthem on his trumpet.

The scorecard is a card, not a magazine full of advertisements.

There's no fancy stadium club, no message board and, above anything else, no lights.

There never have been and as long as P.K. Wrigley, the gum magnate, owns the team, there won't be. He believes, simply, the game was meant to be played in daylight. As for attendance, don't worry.

The Cubs, who haven't won a pennant in 29 years, have not drawn less than a million fans in the last six years. This in spite of the fact every game is televised locally.

On the contrary, the fans stream into the old ballpark at Clark and Addison streets. The first sections to fill are the bleachers behind the vine-covered walls.

High above the centerfield bleachers is the scoreboard, the only one in the majors which gives the linescores of every game. It's also the only one which can be easily read in the daylight since it utilizes metal discs instead of light bulbs.

On top of the scoreboard are the flags of all the National League clubs, flown in the order of the standings each morning. The Cubs also fly another flag atop the huge board, a "W" or an "L," to inform fans driving past the park the outcome of the day's game.

Unfortunately for Cub fans, there've been considerably more "L's" than "W's" flying the last several years. It's only the oldtimers who recall the fact the Cubs have won 16 National League pennants and only one team—the Giants, with 18—have won more.

One who knows all about the Cubs of happier days is the Wrigley Field announcer, Pat Pieper. A throwback to another era, Pieper has missed no more than three or four games in 58 years and none in the last 40.

Today he sits in the press box, chewing his cigar, lashing out at the Cubs when things aren't going so well, and shouting the names of the batters into the old mike.

Until a half-dozen years ago, Pieper sat on the field and handled the baseballs for the plate umpire as well as announce the hitters. Ages ago he did it with a huge megaphone.

There has been more than $5 million spent on improving Wrigley Field over the years, putting in new seats and making things more comfortable for the fans.

But none of the nostalgia has been lost. None of it. Said one Cub official, when asked about any plans for a new park or for moderizing the old:

"All the modernizing that was necessary was done when we took the megaphone away from Pat Pieper and gave him a mike."

Southland sees last of Walton

PORTLAND (UPI)—Bill Walton, looking at the Oregon sunshine from his hospital bedroom, said Saturday he likes the Northwest so much that he may never go back to Southern California.

Walton, the UCLA basketball superstar recently signed by the Portland Trail Blazers of the NBA, is recovering from minor knee surgery.

He has purchased riverfront property just south of Portland.

"I'm going to live here a long time," he said. "I wouldn't have come up here if I didn't like it in Oregon."

He was asked if he would keep in contact with UCLA coach John Wooden.

"I don't know. He's staying in Southern California and I don't know if I'll ever go back there again."

Walton said he was anxious to backpack through Oregon's scenic country. His pack lies near his bed and books on Oregon bicycle trails are in his room.

He said he didn't know when he would be up and around. "I get up three times a day now, but getting around again is a different story."

When asked what he planned to do with his riverfront land he said, "I'm going to try and grow some food to eat. You can't do that in Southern California."

Lacrosse title

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. — John Hopkins finally established its national supremacy in Lacrosse Saturday when it won the National Collegiate title by beating Maryland, 17-12, in the final of the NCAA tournament at Rutgers Stadium.

College football may outlast 'em all

As you know, John McKay receives more offers to turn professional than most men get opportunities to purchase life insurance.

The other day, McKay rejected an overture from a World Football League franchise which is already submerged in red ink and apparently going down three times and coming up twice.

The thing is, the franchise explained to McKay, an angel has been located who will pump unlimited millions into the operation. The one condition is that McKay becomes coach and general manager.

The offer is still open but despite the rising cost of living, it is entirely likely McKay will remain at the University of Southern California. There he plods along on the salaries of athletic director and head football coach, paid vacations, hospitalization plan and sundry fringe benefits.

"Actually," John says, "from a football standpoint, I may be in a pretty fair position. The way things are going, college football may soon be the only football."

WHAT HE means is the professional football universe is one being visited with considerable trouble. The scene, to utter the very least, is one of uncertainty.

The National Football League is faced with a strike by members of the players' association and nothing in the way of progress is being noted. It is not a matter of negotiations breaking down but, rather, that they never got under way in the first place.

Both sides express great fear for the NFL exhibition schedule if, indeed, the regular season can be salvaged.

The WFL, to be perfectly candid, is at the moment of unknown substance. There are stories of financial stability and reports of impending franchise collapses before the first ball is kicked or thrown.

"So," John McKay repeats, "I feel pretty good. Like I say, we may be the only game in town."

THE possibility is a remote, of course, but it is interesting to envision a football universe populated only by colleges and universities. The first item which comes to mind is the need to establish a legitimate national champion. In other words, the colleges would have to come up with an event to replace the Super Bowl.

"I'm not so sure we shouldn't do that anyway," McKay says. "There is nothing new about talk of a 'super' conference. It was discussed even before jet travel when it was not practical. Now, maybe somebody might get serious about it."

Plainly put, the super conference would be the result and product of taking the top football powers of the nation and forming them into a league which would subsequently determine a true national champion.

"PROBABLY," McKay thinks out loud, "you would have to go with Eastern and Western divisions of, say, ten teams each. Then the two would play in a super bowl game and there would be no question in the minds of the nation as to which college football squad was number one."

Quite naturally, McKay does not care to suggest an alignment for the super conference.

"No way," he says. "I'd leave schools out and get them mad at me. But why couldn't the members of such a league be rotating? I mean, if an independent got very strong, it could come in and replace a member that had weakened."

Actually, the foregoing is precisely the manner in which it is done in the pros. When a franchise enters the death throes, it is replaced.

However, in the case of an entire league, action of a somewhat more drastic nature is called for.

Bosox regain AL East lead

BOSTON (AP) — Carl Yastrzemski broke out of a slump with a homer and two-run scoring singles Saturday night and the Boston Red Sox breezed to an 8-0 victory over the Chicago White Sox behind the five-hit pitching of Luis Tiant.

Coupled with Milwaukee's 4-1 loss to Oakland, the victory moved Boston back into first place in the American League East.

Yastrzemski singled across a run in the first inning, lined his seventh homer of the season into the centerfield bleachers in the third and singled home another run in the seventh. The homer was his first since April 22.

Tiant, a 20-game winner last season but off to a slow start this year, raised his record to 6-5 with his fourth consecutive complete-game victory.

The Red Sox, who have won 10 of their last 13 games, jumped on Chicago starter Stan Bahnsen for two runs in the first, one in the third and two in the fourth. They also got one in the seventh off reliever Rich Gossage and two in the eighth off Wayne Granger.

Tiant was helped by three double plays en route to his second shutout of the season and the 30th of his career. Chicago got only one runner as far as second base, Ken Henderson, who singled and moved up on a walk with two out in the second.

USC ambushed by Waves in 9th

Blaine Calder smacked a two-run homer as Pepperdine scored three unearned runs in the ninth inning Saturday to beat defending champion Southern California, 4-2, in the first game of the NCAA District 8 playoffs at Dedeaux Field.

The teams meet again today at noon at USC, with two games if necessary to decide the best-of-three series that will send the winner to the college World Series at Omaha next weekend.

Southern Cal, the Pacific-8 Conference champion seeking its fifth successive NCAA title, took a 2-1 lead into the ninth inning.

But Trojan shortstop Marvin Cobb let Pepperdine's John Guarino reach first on a throwing error to open the inning.

Guarino took second on a sacrifice and went to third on an out before scoring on a single by Carlos Mejia to tie the score 2-2.

Calder followed with his home run for the West Coast Athltic Conference champions.

Southern Cal, now 43-19, scored a run in the fourth when Tom Bhagwat singled, went to third on a wild pitch and a throwing error and scored on a single by Dennis Littlejohn.

The Waves evened the score in their half of the eighth as Rob Piccolo singled in Skip Willis before USC went on top 2-1 in the bottom half ofthe eighth with Anthony Davis singling in Cobb.

Record crowd sees Texas win

ARLINGTON, Tex. (UPI)—Toby Harrah and Tom Grieve each homered Saturday night to power Texas past the Baltimore Orioles, 4-2, before the largest Ranger home crowd ever—39,269.

The Bat Night crowd exceeded Arlington Stadium's official capacity by more than 4,000 and boosted this year's Ranger attendance—tops in the American League—to 160,000 over last year's figure at this time. Texas has now drawn more than 381,000 in 24 dates.

Harrah put Texas in front 1-0 in the third with a leadoff homer off loser Dave McNally, whose record evened at 4-4.

In the fourth, Jeff Burroughs singled with one out and scored in front of Grieve, who blasted a homer into the leftfield bleachers.

Johnson, Blue spark Oakland

OAKLAND (AP) — Deron Johnson drove in three runs with a homer and double and Vida Blue pitched a six-hitter to lead the Oakland A's to a 4-1 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers Saturday.

Johnson hit his fourth home run of the season, off loser Jim Slaton, 6-6, following a single by Joe Rudi in the second inning. Milwaukee second baseman Pedro Garcia dropped two pop flies in the inning to make all three Oakland runs unearned.

Garcia dropped Johnson's pop foul for an error just before the home run. Then he dropped Angel Mangual's pop for a two-base error and Dick Green singled for the third run.

It was the third consecutive triumph and 16th in 22 games for the world champion A's and boosted their lead in the A.L. West to 2½ games.

Lonborg baffles SF

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Jim Lonborg won his 100th major league game and Mike Schmidt hit two home runs and collected four RBI, pacing the Philadelphia Phillies to a 6-2 victory over the San Francisco Giants Francisco Giants Saturday night.

Lonborg, 5-5, the 1967 Cy Young award winner for the Boston Red Sox in the American League, entered the game with a 99-98 lifetime record. He had lost his last two decisions.

Schmidt's two homers led a 13-hit Philadelphia attack that saw everyone in the lineup hit safely except Mike Anderson and Lonborg.

McGlothen stuns Pads

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Lynn McGlothen tossed a three-hitter for his seventh victory of the year Saturday night in pitching the St. Louis Cardinals to a 3-0 victory over San Diego that handed the Padres their eighth successive loss.

Luis Melendez, who had three hits, scored two of St. Louis' runs. He singled in the second, stole second and scored on a single by Ken Reitz. In the fifth Melendez singled, went to third on another single by Reitz and scored on Mike Tyson's single.

McGlothlen raised his record to 7-2. He gave up a double to Bobby Tolan and singles to Fred Kendall and Enzo Hernandez while retiring the last 14 batters in a row.

DODGERS- Bucs demolish Cincy, 14-1

Messersmith's first shutout of the season.

For Andy, his Saturday performance, in which he held the Cubs hitless for three innings, marked his fifth win in six decisions. More important, it overshadowed the agony of his two previous starts when he was nailed for 12 runs in 10⅓ innings, four of the runs via homers.

"I didn't get over those three home runs my last game until I went out there today," he said. "I had to get the hate out of me. To lose is one thing, but to pitch badly is something else. It was awfully discouraging, those last two starts."

Cey's first homer was a three-run shot in the second inning off loser Ken Frailing. It was a massive wallop, beyond the bleachers in leftfield and into the street.

In the third inning his bases-loaded single provided two more runs as the Dodgers scored four times in all.

Finally, in the fourth, he homered again, his fifth of the season with Joe Ferguson on base with a double.

Seven RBI. Two home runs. Not a bad day.

"Not a bad month, don't you think," he kidded afterward.

Besides Cey's remarkable grab on Cardenal's ball in the fourth, Cardenal himself helped Messersmith preserve the shutout.

It was the ninth inning with two out and the Cubs, trailing by 10 runs, had runners at second and third. Cardenal was the man at third.

Messersmith threw a pitch to the batter, Jerry Morales, that got away from catcher Steve Yeager and rolled to the screen.

Cardenal, unexplainably, raced for the plate and was easily thrown out, Yeager to Messersmith. End of game.

"It wasn't," said a stunned Messersmith, "the smartest play I've ever seen. He took the bat right out of Morales' hands.

Arizona eliminated from NCAA play

GREELEY, Colo. (UPI) — Freshman Rick Thoren of Northern Colorado shook off a case of late inning weakness Saturday in holding top-ranked Arizona to just five singles as underdog UNC scored a 6-2 win over the Wildcats and swept the NCAA District 7 playoffs in two games.

UNC, now 31-11, knocked off Arizona 6-5 in the opening game of the series Friday behind the pitching of another freshman—Keith Bailey—as the Bears advanced to the College World Series in Omaha, Neb., for the first time since 1962.

HERB WASHINGTON—

just as hard," he says of his outspoken teammates. "It was rough at first but now I feel comfortable."

It is a strange, oft-times solitary existence for Washington, who takes no batting practice or infield before the game. Occasionally he will shag flies in the outfield but usually he warms up by himself, taking several laps around the stadium — alone with his legs and his thoughts.

When the game begins Washington is not sure he will play and if he does he knows it will be only a brief, one-shot appearance.

"It's a final exam for me every time I get into a game," he says. I can't go one-for-three and feel I've had a good day. I can't afford a mistake because everybody is watching this experiment and it will get blown out of proportion."

Raw speed hasn't made Washington an instant success. He was thrown out four times in his first five steal attempts — mostly because he did not get a good jump. He has had trouble picking up signs and learning the moves of the various pitchers.

But he is improving.

Washington does not boast of his 9.2 speed and he takes exception to those who go out of their way to berate his limited baseball capabilities.

Recently, an Oakland writer was commenting on Washington's problems in picking up the steal sign and suggested that the A's equip third base coach Irv Noren with a message board to help Herbie.

"I felt that was uncalled for," Washington said. "As far as I'm concerned I'll never talk to that guy again. And I know as the season goes along that there will come a time when he will want to talk to me. But I told him I'm gonna be just like Duane Thomas."

In some respects, it is amazing that Washington hasn't been transformed into a babbling idiot by the free-wheeling, free-speaking A's who are not wont to shield their feelings.

"My head is strong and I'm mentally tough," Washington says in explaining his refusal to fall apart. "And I'm not worried about pressure. I've handled as much pressure as can be handled and I've always been able to rise to the occasion."

Even in Oakland.

For that alone, Herb Washington deserves to be recognized. Thankfully, the world's second fastest human is more human than fast.

Heard passes Trevino, leads Kemper by three

CHARLOTTE, N. C. (UPI) — Californian Jerry Heard, shrugging off threatening clouds and a host of pursuers, shot a seven-under-par 65 Saturday to build a formidable three-stroke lead after three rounds of the $250,000 Kemper Open golf tournament.

Heard, winner of this year's Florida Citrus Open at Orlando, birdied four successive holes on the backside to run his three-day total to 69-66-65—200.

Heard started the day one stroke behind second-round leader Lee Trevino and rolled in two birdies on the front nine. He spurted after the turn with consecutive birdies on the 10th through 13th holes to take a three-stroke lead over Trevino and surprising Bob Menne into today's final round.

"I just started making a lot of putts," said a smiling Heard. "They just started to go in."

"This is a fluke, a freak," he said. "I'm just not the kind of player to shoot these really low scores."

"I might get six or eight rounds at 68 or 69—I'll shoot in the 60s a lot—but for me to go 66-65 like I have in the last two rounds, well, it's a fluke.

"I really don't know what happened.

"I just hit a lot of good putts and they kept going in the hole."

"I just don't understand why the course is yielding such low scores," Heard said, "It's not that easy."

Billy Casper, Hubert Green and J. C. Snead were four strokes behind at 204.

Ray Floyd, who started fast with five birdies on the first eight holes, struggled on the backside and finished with a 68-205. He was tied with Bert Yancey, who also had a 68, and Gibby Gilbert who had a 70.

The day's best round was carded by young Tom Kite, the former U. of Texas star from Austin, who equalled the course record 64 set Friday by Trevino, moving into a five-way tie at 10-under-par 206, six strokes back of Heard.

Jack Nicklaus, grousing that the manicured greens over the 7,085-yard Quail Hollow Country Club course put too much of a premium on putting, had a respectable 69-208, eight strokes down.

Arnold Palmer, for the first time in his illustrious career, missed the cut for the third week in a row and did not play Saturday.

Gary Player, considered a favorite after his victory last week in the Memphis Classic, had a 72-214 and was out of contention.

First-round leader Tom Watson ballooned to a 73-208.

Trevino, whose unspectacular 69 was marked by five birdies and two bogeys, was confident about his chance of taking the $50,000 first prize.

"I still have a chance, I think," he said. "Jerry and I are real good friends and we relax each other."

Menne, who had to play an 18-hole qualifier to get into the elite field for the "designated" tournament, had a bogeyless round with five birdies en route to his 67.

"I'm trying to be very patient," he said. "I'm trying very hard not to make a mistake."

Not only was Heard's score the best on the tour this year, so was the overall scoring. The high man in the field for three rounds had a 215 total, one under par. It was the first time in many years—perhaps ever—that the entire field sported sub-par figures.

Rankin has one-stroke LPGA edge

TOWSON, Md. (UPI)—Defending champion Judy Rankin withstood challenges by hometown favorite Carol Mann and Susie Berning Saturday to retain a one-stroke lead heading into the final round of the $40,000 Baltimore Golf Championship.

Miss Rankin, Midland, Texas, tired on the back nine of the Pine Ridge course, but she finished with an even-par 73 for a 36-hole total of 144.

Four women were tied for second place with scores of 145. They were Miss Mann, the 1972 Baltimore champion; Miss Berning, the 1969 titlist; all-time leading money winner Kathy Whitworth and Marilynn Smith.

"I played almost as well as I did Friday, but ran out of zip on the back nine," Miss Rankin said after her round. She shot a 39 on the final nine after going out in 34.

Miss Berning, Lake Tahoe, Nev., shot a sizzling four-under-par 69, the afternoon's best effort.

Miss Whitworth stayed in the thick of it with a 73 over the rain-dampened course. Miss Smith entered the second round in fifth place but shot a three-under 70 to ready herself for today's challenging finale.

UCLA determined to defend track title

AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI)— UCLA's Bruins, winners of the last three NCAA track and field championships, will face a rugged test this week in attempting to make it four in a row.

The NCAA meeting begins Tuesday with the decathlon and qualifying begins in the rest of the events on Thursday at the University of Texas.

UCLA, Tennessee and Texas-El Paso are considered almost dead even in the form charts with other potential contenders coming from North Carolina Central, Florida, Texas Southern and the host Texas Longhorns.

"I know we are going to be ready for a determined effort to defend our title," said UCLA coach Jim Bush, the only active track coach in the country to have ever won three successive NCAA crowns.

"Barring more unforseen injuries I believe we'll be in good physical condition. Benny Brown ran a good relay leg at Modesto recently but he still hasn't regained his full strength or top form."

UCLA will count heavily on Brown, who along with teammate Maxie Parks ranks among the top quartermilers in the nation.

Other Bruin victories are expected to come in the long jump and triple jump. Freshman Jerry Herndon turned in his best long jump ever at Modesto with a 26-71-2 leap and junior Clarence Taylor is a likely winner in the triple jump.

Texas-El Paso's strength should come in the field events with defending shotput champion Hans Hoglund expected to win again along with pole vaulter Larry Jessee and hammer thrower Peter Farmer.

Tennessee will be paced by sprinter Reggie Jones, defending steeplechase champion Doug Brown and quartermiler Darwin Bond.

Hollywood Oaks looms wide open

Lucky Spell wins Princess

Undefeated in six starts, Miss Musket was the queen of Western three-year-old fillies until dethroned by Modus Vivendi in the recent Railbird Stakes.

However, Modus Vivendi's reign didn't last long, as she was upset Saturday by Burris and Wilder's Lucky Spell in the $43,100 Princess Stakes and now the $75,000 Hollywood Oaks, championship event of the Hollywood Park meeting for sophomore misses to be run June 15, looms a wide-open scramble.

Fernando Toro rode Lucky Spell, a daughter of Lucky Mel who broke her maiden at Hollypark last summer racing in a $15,000 claimer. Next-to-last in a field of six early, Lucky Spell roared past Modus Vivendi inside the eighth pole and drew off to tally by 2½ lengths. Modus Vivendi, the 7-5 favorite of 35,902 fans, held off Bedknob's late rush to save the place by a neck.

Time for the mile and one-sixteenth was 1:42⅘, which knocked a fifth of a second off the stakes mark set by Gamely seven years ago. Lucky Spell paid $11.80, $4.60 and $3.60 across the board.

Her owners, Walt Burris and Lynn Wilder of Newport Beach, are in the construction business and Lucky Spell is their only horse. Burris missed the race because he was in Florida, but Wilder, his wife and Mrs. Burris provided an adequate rooting section.

A week ago Lucky Spell narrowly was beaten by Fleet Peach in an allowance event, a race Toro felt she would have won except that she propped after seeing the starting gate at the head of the stretch. Lucky Spell saw no starting gates Saturday.

"She relaxed and the speed up front helped," said Toro. "I had to take up when Fleet Peach stopped in front of us, but other than that we had a good trip."

For trainer Henry Moreno, who has enjoyed tremendous success with distaffers throughout his career, the Princess was his first Hollypark stakes win since the 1971 Cabrillo, which he won with Melos. Coincidentally, Melos was also a winner on Saturday's program.

Modus Vivendi raced Fleet Peach into defeat after a duel on the front end that saw them speed the first half-mile in :46 flat. However, she never got a breather, as Special Goddess quickly took up the challenge and they were heads apart after six furlongs in 1:10.

Meanwhile, Toro was maneuvering Lucky Spell to the outside for clear racing room and she ran down the leaders with little difficulty.

"Coming off sprints, she was too fresh and wouldn't relax," commented Don Pierce, who rode Modus Vivendi, but he then added, "She'll be tougher next time now that she's had a race around two turns."

For the first time in Hollypark history, stablemates finished in a dead-heat Saturday. Track Commander and Dana Strand, both trained by Gary Jones, for his dad Farrell, were the principals involved in the rarity, which occurred in the second race.

Laffit Pincay rode Dana Strand and it was one of three winners for him, as he stretched his win-a-day streak to 18 and increased his victory total for the meet to 79.

Agitate, top-ranked among three-year-old colts in the West, will make his Hollypark debut this afternoon when he faces four rivals in the $60,000 Argonaut Handicap.

The Argonaut will mark the California Derby winner's first start since he finished third in the Kentucky Derby. Challenging him in the mile and one-eighth test will be Battery E., Shirley's Champion, Stardust Mel and Rocket Review.

Acquit seven sulky drivers of fix charge

NEW YORK (UPI) — Seven harness racing drivers were acquitted Saturday in Brooklyn Federal Court of fixing superfecta races at Yonkers and Roosevelt racetracks last year.

Drivers Del Insko and Dale Ross were found innocent at 6:55 p.m. amid prolonged applause in the packed courtroom.

Three hours earlier, five other drivers, Carmine Abbatiello, Real Cormier, William Gilmour, Kenneth McNutt and Elden Turcotte were acquitted by the jury of eight men and four women.

"It had to happen, it had to happen, I feel good," said a jubilant Ross.

Judge Orin Judd told the jury; "I can understand why you could have a reasonable doubt. I would feel better if the racing authorities were really more concerned about protecting the $2 and $3 bettor."

Richards caps big Alamitos weekend

Jockey Jerry Richards completed a big weekend of racing at Los Alamitos Saturday night when he narrowly hung on for a nose verdict with Hy Divy in the featured seventh race.

On Friday night, Richards had taken Etta Capri to the fastest qualifying time for next Saturday's $86,100 Los Alamitos Derby and he found himself back in the winner's circle following Saturday's 870-yard feature race.

Hy Divy, a two-time stakes winner last summer, was winning his first race of the current meeting when he raced the Vessels Sr. course in 46:14 seconds to post a nose triumph over fast-closing 9-5 favorite John's Rocket.

Hy Divy won a division of the War Chic and El Ocho Sententa Stakes last summer and then closed out the '73 season with a second behind Little Lady Roar in the $25,000 Marathon.

Richards sent the 7-year-old speedster to the lead soon after the start, racing head-and-head with Mandetta down the backstretch. He disposed of Mandetta coming around the turn and drew off to a comfortable lead in the stretch but then was just able to hold off the closing surge of the public choice.

Hy Divy paid $6.20, $3.60 and $2.80 as the 2-1 second choice of the more than 10,000 fans in attendance. John's Rocket, ridden by leading jockey Terry Lipham, returned $3.80 and $3.

Ridden by Gerland Gallitano, the winner clocked 1:50 for the mile-and-⅛ for three-year-olds, with Sr. Diplomat second and Sports Editor third in the 12-horse field.

BELMONT—Chris Evert ($7.60) rallied from just off the pace to win the $39,625 Mother Goose Stakes, the second leg for her in the Triple Crown for three-year-old fillies. Ridden by Jorge Velasquez, the winner moved into the lead on the backtrech, then clung to a narrow lead through the stretch to score by a half-length in the mile-and-⅛ race in 1:48³⁄₅.

GOLDEN GATE—Jockey Francisco Mena piloted Merry Madeleine ($11.40) to a 1¾-length triumph over Hurry Countess in the $30,000-added Yerba Buena Handicap. Time for the 1½-mile race was 2:31⅘.

MONMOUTH—Arum Lily ($7.20) outsped a field of 12 fillies and mares from the start to easily win the $28,975 Regret Handicap at six furlongs. Ridden by Bob Ussery, the winner clocked 1:11 to coast home four lengths ahead of Full of Hope, with Honorable Miss third.

LIBERTY BELL—Mo Bay ($5.80), ridden by Don Brumfield, won the $27,075 Keystone Handicap by six lengths, running a mile and 70 yards in 1:41.

CALDER—Zippy. Do ($3.40), ridden by Carlos Marquez, steamed through the pack in the stretch and posted a 1½-length win over I'm Adorable in the $24,600 Aspidistra Stakes. Time for the mile on the turf was 1:37.

THE SPORTS TIME MACHINE

By Dave Brase and Tim Suttons

CLEVELAND'S Billy Wamsganss tags out Brooklyn's stunned Otto Miller to complete unassisted triple play in 1920 World Series.

Cleveland, 1920

1920 hasn't been an exceptionally good year for baseball. Every day there are new revelations concerning last year's World Series that was evidently fixed by some members of the Chicago White Sox.

Even worse, Cleveland's classy shortstop, Ray Chapman died from injuries received when he was hit in the head by a pitched ball during the stretch drive for the American League pennant.

The grief-stricken Cleveland players went into a slump following this tragedy but recovered in time to find themselves in the World Series against the Brooklyn Dodgers.

The Series is all tied up at two wins apiece. In the first inning of game five Elmer Smith hits the first grand-slam home run ever in World Series play.

Now in the sixth inning the Dodgers are up and have runners at first and second. Clarence Mitchell is at the plate. The Dodger runners are moving with the pitch. Mitchell swings. He hits a low liner toward right-center field:

CLEVELAND second-baseman Billy Wambsganss leaps at the ball and spears it near second base. He steps on the bag to double up the runner who was on his way to third and now looks toward first.

Wambsganss doesn't have to look very far. Standing right next to him is Brooklyn's Otto Miller. Miller seems to be so surprised that he has become immobile.

Wambsganss tags him out. The Cleveland team runs off the field. The crowd is strangely silent at first, then some people begin to realize what has happened.

The roar of the crowd rises as they begin to realize that they have just wintessed the first unassisted triple play in World Series history.

Battle for pole at Riverside

RIVERSIDE (Special)—Defending champion Hershel McGriff and his '69 Chevelle head a field of 70 cars and drivers in qualifying time trials today at Riverside International Raceway for the June 9 California 100 NASCAR Sportsman stock car race.

The $10,000 race is a prelim to the $80,000 Tuborg 400 for NASCAR Grand National cars. Both races will be held a week from today.

Practice rounds over Riverside's 2.62-mile, 8-turn "short" road course begin this morning at 9, followed by two-lap qualifying time trials at 1.

Other drivers bidding for the pole position in the 40-car field include Clem Proctor, a Paramount tavern owner driving a '68 Ford Torino; Ivan Baldwin of Highland in a '65 Chevelle, Sam Beler of Lakewood in a '61 Ford and Ron Hornaday, who finished second behind McGriff in this race last year. Hornaday, from Simi Valley, drives a '63 Thunderbird.

The California 100 race will be flagged away at 11 a.m. next Sunday, two hours prior to the start of the Tuborg 400. Practice and qualifying for the Tuborg 400 takes place Friday and Saturday.

Batoto keeps title

NAHA, Japan (UPI) — Orient Boxing Federation flyweight champion Socrates Batoto of the Philippines retained his title Saturday by stopping Okinawa challenger Kenichi Shimozato at 42 seconds of the ninth round of a scheduled 12-round title bout.

Is Jabbar liked by his teammates?

Q. Kareem Jabbar looks like such a sour guy. Is he liked by his teammates and the other NBA players? — Emmett Kerns, Boston.

A. Reaction to Jabbar, up close and from afar, falls in between "like" and "dislike." Respected is the accurate word. He is aloof, but he never puts down his teammates, whom he carried all year. An example of Jabbar's stature in the NBA was the difficulty he had getting p.a. announcers around the league to use his Muslim name only. At best they were giving him the dual intro: " ... formerly Lew Alcindor." Opposition players demanded their home announcers use his adopted name.

Q. "Semi-Tough" was the raunchiest, dirtiest book I ever read about sports, and now I hear the same fellow is writing one about pro golf. I assume it will be just as dirty, but will the incidents in the story be taken from true things that happen on the tour? Who is the hero patterned after? — Quincy Bragg, Tampa.

A. The new book, "Dead Solid Perfect" (an approach shot to the pin), will be a lot more true-to-life than "Semi-Tough." Whereas author Dan Jenkins knew nothing about pro football, he is a scratch player and a top golf writer. Jenkins uses titillating incidents which only the touring pros will recognize. The hero is undoubtedly Jenkins fantasizing himself as a pro champ.

Q. It doesn't seem like 15 years since the American Football League started. Wasn't Billy Cannon the first player the AFL drafted? Can you give me the AFL's first round and what happened to them? — George Regnary, Butte, Mont.

A. Gerhard Schwedes, Syracuse running back, was the first pick (Boston), failed to earn a place on the team, wound up sweeping out the office. The rest of the first round went in order: Richie Lucas, Don Meredith, Roger LeClerc, Cannon, Monty Stickles, Dale Hackbart and George Izo. Four of them signed with the NFL, and only Cannon was a success in the new league.

Q. I was in Vegas last week and saw half a dozen pro football players (names omitted) at the tables. Isn't this a pretty dicey situation for them to be in? Doesn't the league have a rule that covers this? — Cap Vickers, Seattle.

A. Las Vegas today is so clean it's a Disneyland for Adults. The NFL players, moreover, are aware of impressions and are constantly reminded they must remain above suspicion. While doing TV commercials in New York recently, Jimmy The Greek Snyder beat Roger Staubach out of one dollar in a quickie poker game between takes. When Staubach paid up, Snyder pushed the bill back to him and grinned. "Keep it," he said. "In a week it would be all over the country that Jimmy The Greek cleaned out Roger Staubach in a high stakes poker game."

Q. Philadelphia Flyers star Barry Asbee feared he would lose an eye from being hit by the puck in a playoff game. Can you tell me how fast a puck goes? — Vic Leonard, Philadelphia.

A. As fast as 185 miles per hour, which is the record clocked by Bobby Hull.

Strike zone sweatsox high

Mini-mite is a 'power' at the plate

Pitchers' nightmare

Paul Santrey, 11, walks to plate in Little League game in Del Rio, Tex: virtually assured of being walked—it's happened every time he's gone to bat so far. The catcher, believe it or not, is the same age as Paul. AP Wirephoto

DEL RIO, Tex. (AP) — Paul Santrey, a mere 36 inches high, may by the littlest Little Leaguer anywhere. But he is a power at the plate, in his own special way.

The mini-mite, as some of his teammates on the Rotary Club team call him, has walked every time he's come to bat. The pitchers just can't handle the tiny strike zone he presents.

This is Paul's first year as a Little League player. He had been bat boy the past two seasons in El Paso, but yearned for the thrill of playing. When his dad was transferred to Del Rio as administrator of the Val Verde Memorial Hospital, Paul had made up his mind.

He declared he was going to register for the Del Rio Club.

"As bat boy?" queried his father.

"Heck no, I'm going to play on a team here," said Paul, 11, whose 4-year-old sister is taller than he.

He went through regular channels, had a tryout and hustled his way onto the squad as a third baseman.

He can throw to second base pretty well, but has trouble making the long toss to first. And since his stride is about one-fifth as long as that of his teammates, it takes him a while to run to base.

But he's got a ton of heart. Wearing a uniform specially tailored to his tiny dimensions, and using a cut-down bat, Paul does not hesitate to take a cut at the ball when he's at the plate. And he stands unflinchingly as the balls zip by.

There's no denying that his real threat is as a pinch hitter. In his Pete Rose-like crouch, the 40-pounder is the toughest out in the league. A called strike on Paul would be sweatsox high on a more typical player.

He has been at bat an estimated 20 times this season, sometimes as a starter, sometimes in spot situations where a walk is needed.

The nearest he has been in danger of a strikeout came a few nights ago when a pitcher worked the count to 3 and 2 before walking him.

That Paul has a mighty swing was proven recently in batting practice when he broke his bat. He still preserves the split wood proudly.

The highlight of his career came last week when he scored his first run. He had taken his usual walk, advanced around the bases, and scampered home standing up. Both teams gave him a big ovation.

Paul probably will not get many hits in his baseball career. But when the bases are loaded and a walk means a run, he'll be the most important man on the squad.

Norwalk, Cerritos 9s dominate all-leagues

John Franklin of Norwalk and Louie Souza of Cerritos were voted most vaulable players in their respective leagues.

Souza, a sophomore, suffered only one pitching loss in Suburban League play and was instrumental in helping Cerritos to a share of the league championship with Artesia.

Franklin pitched Norwalk to a second place finish in the San Gabriel Valley League.

Norwalk placed four men on the San Gabriel Valley League first team. Joining Franklin were catcher Jerry Walker, infielder Phil DuBois and outfielder Gregg Gipe.

Cerritos placed four men on the Suburban League first team. Joining Souza were infielders Race Filarey and Rod Wilcox and catcher Bill Vincent. Three Artesia players were voted on the first squad: first baseman Greg Stevens, outfielder Raul Morales and pitcher Chuck Campbell.

A TESTIMONIAL ABOUT A CAR, FROM A MAN WHOSE LIFE DEPENDS ON A CAR.

The flying car you see above is a Fiat 124.

The man flying the car is a Frenchman by the name of Rémy Julienne. Europe's greatest living stunt driver.

"In my work, if you want to stay alive, you leave nothing to chance.

"Obviously the car is everything. Before I drive a car I know it 100%. The body and suspension must be extraordinarily strong.

"And mechanically it must perform with great precision. It must do exactly what I want, exactly when I want it.

"Because if I am even one hundredth of a second off, it is goodbye."

Now, since in Europe there are 50 different kinds of cars to choose from, we thought you'd be interested to know that in the more than 100 films Rémy Julienne has made he's done more stunts in Fiats than in any other car.

And the Fiat he prefers to drive above all is the Fiat 124.

A family car.

Four-day grunion run this weekend

School isn't out yet, but we have had a touch of summer weather already, so the school kids, as well as many adults, probably will be trying for grunion this week, starting Thursday night and continuing through Sunday night.

Yessir, it's grunion courtin' time again when the silvery little fish flirt around in the surf and finally decide on some beach where they can try to reproduce their kind. It is probably one of the most complicated processes, yet all so simple.

We can tell you what, when (approximately) and why, but not where, so please don't call me at home, nor anybody at the I,P-T, and ask "Where are the grunion going to run?"

The fish are scheduled to appear on the beaches—some, not all—at 10:30 p.m. Thursday and the run will continue for a couple of hours. Please remember, however, that the male and female grunion can miss that by one-half hour or more either prior to the scheduled time or after.

If you are not familiar with the grunion run, the female comes ashore with a high wave, and in a flash of speed, digs a hole in he sand and lays her eggs. The male follows to fertilize and both return to sea with the next high wave. That wave also serves to cover the eggs, where they lay in the sand to hatch.

The period of incubation lasts until the next series of high tides when the babies are washed to sea to eat or be eaten.

THE TIMES OF THE SPAWNING RUNS can be predicted with accuracy, but there is no possible way that the marine biologists can tell you where. This much is certain: In past years grunion often have spawned on the beaches here, downcoast at Seal Beach, Huntington Beach and other places. They also have come ashore at beaches all the way to Santa Barbara.

Even though the Department of Fish and Game regulations call for licenses to catch grunion, you do not actually fish for the tiny silversides; you "hunt" them and when you see them come on the beach, you try to grab them with your hands and remember, HANDS ONLY.

You may take as many as you feel that you can use, but the DFG asks that you not catch the grunion and waste them. When cleaned and prepared for deep-fat frying, you will find a delicious morsel that is new and different.

No nets may be used. You may put the fish in buckets or containers, but you must not trap the fish in anything except your bare hands.

Oddly enough, Southern California and part of the coast of Baja California are the only places in the world where you will find grunion. They are part of the silverside family of fishes. Others are the jack smelt and the top smelt.

Hours for the other three nights are 11:06 to 1:06 Friday, 11:41 to 1:41 Saturday, and 12:23 a. m. to 2:43 a. m. the last night, which actually is Monday morning, although we call it Sunday night.

THERE WILL BE THREE MORE RUNS of grunion this year before the season is closed to protect the species. Another is scheduled this month—June 21, 22, 23 and 24, with the runs almost identical in times with those of this week. We will carry those hours at a later date.

There are two runs for July—6, 7, 8 and 9, and 19,20, 21 and 22. That will be all until next spring.

Here are some tips about grunion catching that may be helpful. We don't know that the fish are shy or timid, but they usually don't come ashore where there is a lot of light and excitement. Once ashore, the fish are helpless until the next high wave a comes to their rescue. It is then that you grab 'em with your bare hands and transfer to a container of some kind.

While the DFG doesn't have enough employes to guard all beaches, it does on some rather unexpected occasions patrol certain beaches. If you are 16 or older and catch grunion in any number, you must have that basic fishing license. I personally can guarantee that there are ssuch fish as grunion because I have caught them in years gone by. Now, those late hours don't appeal to me.

Grunion, being members of the smelt family, readily mix with their kin, but their numbers are of minor commercial significance in smelt catches.

THERE IS A SMALL FISHING CLUB called the Dolphins and its 23 members live in Long Beach or in the surrounding area. The Dolphin Fishing Club was started by Dr. Earl Hershman to promote fishing skills, conservation and good fellowship. Most of the members of the club are members of other and larger organizations, but they stick to their Dolphin ideals, even if they meet only once a year for a formal session.

On other occasions, they organize boat charters, fishing for yellowtail and albacore out of San Diego, game fish near Long Beach when the fish are running and at times venture into the Gulf of California for special trips.

When they fish at San Diego, they use the Pacific Outdoor (Fisherman's Landing), with Jeff Jones as skipper.

At their most recent annual meeting and barbecue, Bill Homes and Tony Guillen were the chefs and prepared the dinner.

Comments on an 'odd business'

Advertising: It's serious, and yet it isn't

Editor's Note: This is the last in a series of conversations with people who "talk about what they do all day and what they think of while they do it." The series was excerpted from the new book "Working," published by Pantheon and Copyright 1974 Studs Terkel.

By STUDS TERKEL

John Fortune is 36. He has been with an advertising agency for eight years. "I started out in philosophy at Princeton ..."

STUDS TERKEL

I am what is called a creative supervisor. Creative is a pretentious word. I have a group of about six people who work for me. They create radio commercials, print ads, billboards that go up on highways, television commercials too. Your purpose is to move goods off the shelf (laughs): your detergents, your soaps, your foods, your beers, cigarettes ...

It's an odd business. It's serious but it isn't. (Laughs.) Life in an advertising agency is like being at a dull party, interrupted by more serious moments. There's generally a kind of convivial attitude. Nobody's particularly uptight. Creativity of this kind flourishes better.

They're aware that they're talking about little bears capering around a cereal box and they're arguing which way the bears should go. It's a silly thing for adults to be doing. At the same time, they're aware the client's going to spend a million dollars on television time to run this commercial. Millions of dollars went into these little bears, so that gave them an importance of their own. That commercial, if successful, can double salaries. It's serious, yet it isn't. This kind of split is in everybody's mind. Especially the older generation in advertising, people like me.

I WAS A WRITER who came into advertising because I was looking for a way to make money. My generation is more casual about it. Many will be writers who have a novel in the desk drawer, artists who are going to quit someday and paint. Whereas the kinds coming up consider advertising itself to be the art form. They've gone to school and studied advertising. There's an intensity about what they do. They don't laugh at those little bears capering around the cereal. Those little bears are it for them. They consider themselves fine artists and the advertising business owes them the right to create, to express themselves.

The way you sell things is to make some kind of connection between the attributes of the product and what people want, human needs. Some years ago, there was a product called Right Guard, an underarm deodorant. It was positioned at that time for men. It was not going anywhere. A copywriter noticed that it was a spray, so the whole family could use it. He said, "Let's call it the all-family spray." There was no change in the product, merely in the way it was sold. What any product is selling is a package of consumer satisfactions. A dream in the flesh or something.

They're all very similar. That raises the question: How important is advertising? Is there a justification for it? It's a question people are asking all over the country. I myself am puzzled by it. There's a big change going on right now. The rules are becoming more stringent. In another five years you'll just have a lawyer up there. He'll say, "This is our product. It's not much different from any other product. It comes in a nice box, no nicer than anybody else's. It'll get your clothes pretty clean, but so will the others. Try it because we're nice people, not that the other company isn't nice."

I ENJOY IT actually. I think any kind of work, after a while, gets a kind of functional automony. It has an intensity of its own. You start out doing something for a reason and if you do it long enough, even though the reason may have altered, you continue to do it, because it gives you its own satisfaction.

It's very hard to know if you know something in this business. There are very few genuine experts. It's a very fragile thing. To tell somebody they should spend 10 million dollars on this tiger that's gonna represent their gasoline, that's quite a thing to sell somebody on doing. Gee, why should it be a tiger? Why shouldn't it be a llama?

The way you see, is being very confident. Advertising is full of very confident people. (Laughs.) Whether it's also full of competent people is another question. Coming into a meeting is a little like swimming in a river full of piranha fish. If you start to bleed, they're gonna catch you. You have to build yourself up before you're gonna sell something. You have to have an attitude that it's terrific.

I say to myself, Isn't it terrific? It could be worse — that's another thing I say. And I whistle and skip around and generally try to get my juices moving. Have a cup of coffee. I have great faith in coffee. (Laughs.) There's an element of theater in advertising. When I'm presenting the stuff, I will give the impression of really loving it a lot.

IT'S AMAZING how much your attitude toward something is conditioned by what other people say about it, what other people's opinions are. If somebody who is very important starts to frown, your heart can sink. If you've done this a couple of times, you know this may not be the end of the world. He may have noticed that the girl has on a purple dress and he hates purple. Meanwhile you have to continue. You get yourself up. Some commercials require singing and dancing to present. It's like being in front of any audience. When you begin to lose your audience, there's cold feet, sweat.

Originally I was a copywriter. I sat in a room and it was very simple. I would go to the boss and he'd tell me what he wanted. I'd go back to my room and try to write it, and get mad and break pencils and pound the wall. Then finish it and take it in to him, and change it and change it, and then I'd go back and write it over again and take it in to him and he'd change it again, and I'd take it back.

This would happen 30 or 40 times and then we'd move to another man. He'd put his feet on the desk and change it again.

Now that the burden of work is greater, I take home less. I've gotten more and more good at erasing things from my mind. That's why I leave myself little notes on the typewriter. I just got back from a three-day weekend and I can hardly find the office. (Laughs.) I erased it completely from my mind. I think it's a sign of health. When you're doing creative work, you should think about it all the time. When you're doing administrative work, you should think about it as little as possible.

Actually, my career choice in advertising, which I've drifted into, is connected with the fantasy of power. I have a sense of slowly increasing power, but the limits are very frustrating. I feel I want to do more, but I feel restraints within the system and myself. I think I hold myself back more than the system does. The system is easy to work within if you're willing to, if you're smart enough.

What would our country be like without advertising? I don't know (Laughs.) It would be a different country, I think.

Postscript: At a pub in mid-Manhattan frequented by advertising people, he says, "I have a recurring dream in which I'm a stand-up comedian. I'm standing on a stage with a blue spotlight on me, talking. I begin by telling jokes. Gradually, I begin to justify my life. I can't quite see the audience. The light becomes more and more intense. I can't remember what I say. I usually end up crying. This dream I've had maybe three, four times."

Store employes set own wages

OAKLAND (UPI) — Bookkeeper Stan Robinson and his 11 co-workers at an appliance store here set their own wages, take as much vacation as they want, and collect profit-sharing bonuses.

When one of the employes at Friedmans' appliances thinks he deserves a raise, he merely tells Robinson what he wants.

"They're happy as a lark," Robinson says. Before the pay plan was introduced five years ago, he said, "the fellows were kind of grumbling, thinking they should get more money.

"Now they just ask me and they get it. I don't even talk to art about it, or Morry."

Owners Arthur and Morris Friedman said they began to let employes set their own wages to implement "the words we've heard — so many pretty words in our lives from ministers and other people."

IT WAS, explained Arthur, a way of "practicing what we preach."

The Friedman brothers never argue with their employes. They allow them to choose the customers they want to wait on, borrow company trucks for their own personal use and never discuss salaries with them.

Arthur Friedman, 51, estimates the service men, truck drivers and a warehouseman are making about $1,000 a month, more than the union scale for retail clerks. Most of them are union members for health and welfare benefits.

The store itself has been showing about the same rate of profit the past five years as before, with $750,000 in total volume.

"We don't like to profit off the effort of some other guy," Friedman said.

"Some of my friends say, 'They're going to call you a dirty commie.' But how can they since I own a business?"

The Friedmans have discovered that their employes now watch the store's profits as carefully as they do, as if checking their own wallets.

Truck driver Robert Ryan, 27, said he keeps tabs on business to help him make salary requests. "We do not want the company to go under."

"All the employes know you can't go hog wild," said semi-retired service man Elwood Larson, 64. "To get what we asked for we have to produce — otherwise the company will be in trouble."

LARSON said he adjusts his pay hikes with jumps in the cost of living. "I figure what I need and ask for it.

"I never ask what the others are getting. Never paid any attention to it and they've never asked me."

Robinson, the longest tenured employe and the man who keeps the financial figures straight, says the salary requsts are not exorbitant.

"Last week one of the fellows asked for $25 a week more. But he hadn't taken a raise for about a year. He might be happy for a couple of years now," Robinson said.

"I was short last week I gave myself 10 bucks but I cut down this week."

THINKING OF BUYING?

Buy At Todays Prices: WE DON'T HAVE TO TELL YOU HOME PRICES ARE SOARING! LAND IS SCARCE — MATERIAL COSTS ARE SPIRALING — LABOR COSTS ARE RISING TO KEEP UP WITH THE TIMES. YOU NEVER WILL BE ABLE TO BUY AT TODAYS PRICES AGAIN.

Buy For A Reason: IN A SENSE YOU WILL BE PUTTING A CONTROL ON YOUR MONTHLY HOUSING EXPENSES — THE TAXES AND INTEREST ARE DEDUCTIBLE — YOU PROBABLY SHOULD HAVE PURCHASED IN 1973 THEN YOU WOULD KNOW WHAT WE MEAN.

Buy With Confidence: AT REX L. HODGES WE HAVE SOLD OVER 95,000 HOMES WE HAVE BEEN IN BUSINESS SINCE 1929, THAT'S OVER 45 YEARS

THINKING OF SELLING?

Consider The Facts: WE LEAVE NOTHING TO CHANCE: AT REX L. HODGES EVERY POSSIBLE TOOL OF THE TRADE IS IMPLEMENTED "IF HODGES CAN'T HELP YOU, PROBABLY NO ONE CAN"

IT'S A GIANT ACCESSORY AND CAMPING GOODS STORE. IT'S A MAMMOTH ONE STOP SERVICE DEPT. FOR ALL MAKES OF RV'S. IT'S THE HIGHEST VOLUME RV SALES FACILITY IN THE WORLD. IT'S RENTALS, FINANCE AND INSURANCE ALL UNDER ONE ROOF. IT'S THE NEW WAY . . . THE ONLY WAY TO BUY A MOTORHOME, CAMPER OR TRAILER.
We're excited! Open Road has really done it again. In the old days, RV buyers had to deal with many different merchants. Service was a nightmare. One place serviced your sanitation system, another your refrigerator, another your oven, etc. NOW our one stop concept gives you a real home for your RV — Regardless of make. We also think that once you visit us, we can make it impossible for you to buy anything but Open Road and to buy them from us.
THE RV PRICE INCREASES ARE A REALITY! THEY'RE A FACT OF LIFE. WE'RE HOLDING THEM DOWN THIS WEEKEND AT YOUR OPEN ROAD RV CENTERS. DON'T WAIT ANY LONGER — IT COULD COST YOU SERIOUS MONEY — SHOP OPEN ROAD TODAY!
FACT No. 1—The Kelley Blue Book is the "bible" of dealers, banks, finance companies, and credit unions.
FACT. No. 2—The new edition of the Kelley Blue Book was printed early and is now in the hands of the above mentioned institutions.
FACT No. 3—The Kelley Blue Book normally shows a constant depreciation in each new edition. This edition, however, shows a very substantial increase in the value of Open Road RV's.
SOME OPEN ROADS WENT UP AS MUCH AS $1000 IN THIS NEW EDITION!!!
FACT No. 4—Interest rates are soaring — so are manufacturing costs. Some manufacturers have already announced massive price increases.
LIKE WE SAID . . . WE'RE HOLDING PRICES DOWN THIS WEEKEND FOR THE GRAND OPENING, BUT WE CAN'T DO IT MUCH LONGER — WE URGE YOU TO GET THE DEAL OF A LIFETIME NOW!!

Ed McMahon— a second banana with broad appeal

By BOB MARTIN
TV-Radio Editor

For a second banana, Ed McMahon eats high on the hog — to mix metaphors, or foods, or what have you.

Actually, that's not quite accurate. As a highly successful television personality who has branched out into other entertainment fields in recent years, McMahon can afford to eat as high on the hog as his heart — or stomach — desires. But, now that he's got it made, Ed finds he has to stick to a strict diet. Instead of beef or pork, he settles for lamb, chicken or turkey.

Big Ed, announcer and genial sidekick of Johnny Carson on NBC's "The Tonight Show" for almost a dozen years, arrived promptly at 12:30 for a lunchtime interview at the Smoke House in Burbank.

"You're right on time," I remarked, by way of cracking the ice.

"YOU CAN set your watch by me — just like at the studio or in my nightclub act," said McMahon.

He ordered iced tea — "in a decorative glass" — and told the waitress he'd like a dry omelet prepared a certain way. When informed the restaurant couldn't prepare it his way, Ed ordered a stuffed-tomato tuna salad.

"This breaks my diet — but not too much," he commented.

"I've weighed as much as 243," he told me, "but now I weigh 205, the same as when I played football at Boston College. I'm about 6-3½, so that's not bad."

McMahon loves good food — and "I'm an excellent cook, if I do say so myself. But I can't eat fancy things now." So he doesn't do a great deal of cooking at the Marina del Rey apartment where he lives with his male chauffeur.

IT'S NOT ONLY fancy foods that gourmet McMahon misses.

"I just love greasy cheeseburgers, hot dogs and all that junk," he admitted.

He permitted himself the thought, at least briefly, of having a greasy cheeseburger the next time he takes his youngest child, 14-year-old Jeffrey, on an outing.

The father of four has been legally separated from his wife of 29 years for a little more than two years now — ever since the Carson show moved from New York City to Burbank. Jeffrey lives with Ed's estranged wife in Pacific Palisades.

"I see a good bit of him," said McMahon, "and I'm on good terms with my wife."

Some quotes attributed to Mrs. McMahon, however, have indicated they aren't on such good terms.

THE McMAHONS' other children are Claudia, 28, Michael, 23, and Linda, 20. Ed said his older daughter is working in New York, "helping former drug addicts find jobs"; Michael is at the University of Colorado ("he doesn't know what he wants to do yet"), and Linda has a job with NBC's "The Midnight Special" program.

Ed said he spent his last vacation with his children at a home he owns on the west coast of Florida, south of Sarasota. He also has a summer home in New Jersey, he told me.

The 51-year-old TV personality, one of the most famous "second bananas" in showbiz, has acquired a bit of a reputation as a swinging single since his separation. He only laughed when I asked if he thought he'd ever get married again — and said he had no plans along that line.

ED HAS HITCHED his wagon to Johnny Carson's star ever since 1958, when he was the announcer for Johnny's "Who Do You Trust?" show. Before that, he had been top banana on a TV variety show in Philadelphia.

You know Ed and Johnny hit it off well together — or why would they have teamed up so long? Ed has been the announcer and good-natured foil for Johnny's humor on "The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson" since its start Oct. 1, 1962. The popular show, incidentally, was one of three nominees for an Emmy this season as "outstanding music-variety series." It lost out, along with "The Sonny and Cher Comedy Hour," to "The Carol Burnett Show" at last Tuesday night's awards ceremonies.

BOTH CARSON and McMahon signed new three-year contracts with NBC a couple of months ago. Johnny's pact reportedly calls for about $3 million a year, plus a four-day week and a minimum of 12 weeks off each year. Ed doesn't make that kind of money, but he too is paid handsomely. He gets seven weeks off a year and, even more important to Ed, the latest contract permits him to do other TV shows, "even on other networks," so long as they don't interfere with his "Tonight" duties.

"Johnny and I are good friends," McMahon told me. "We get along well together, we understand how each other is thinking, we enjoy ourselves on the show. I try to give Johnny what he needs and stay out of his way the rest of the time.

"We tape at 5:30 each day, and I arrive at NBC at 2. I talk with the producers and rehearse the commercials. At 5:15 I drop in to chat with Johnny — but we don't discuss what we'll say on the show. Mine is all ad-lib on the program — only Carson's monologue is prepared in advance. From 5:25 to 5:30 I warm up the audience."

EVEN AS successful a second banana as Ed McMahon, who loves his job on "Tonight," wants to show what he can do on his own once in a while. And his exposure on the Carson show has enabled Ed to move into the movies, nightclubs and other TV shows in the last few years. Also, he emcees numerous one-night shows across the country each year, many of them benefit affairs for which he takes no pay.

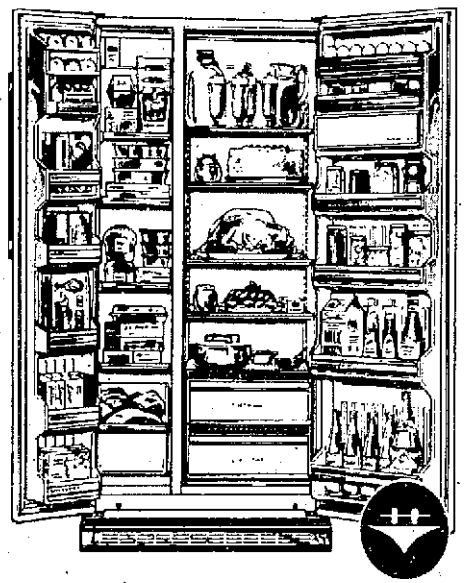

"My greatest satisfaction, in recent years, has been having my Vegas nightclub act well received," Ed told me. "I played the Tropicana last winter and am going back there — with Vikki Carr again — in August at higher pay."

Added Ed, who sings ("in a whiskey baritone") and cracks jokes in his act: "And the pay in Vegas is a sin."

As second banana or top banana, McMahon is a treat to his many fans. Carson-McMahon buffs hope, there is never a banana split.

BOBBIE GENTRY will star in a four-week variety mini-series, "Bobbie Gentry's Happiness Hour," which has its debut at 8 p.m. Wednesday on Ch. 2.

Bea Arthur's personality more gentle than Maude's

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

Amid the turmoil surrounding the immensely successful Bud Yorkin-Norman Lear television series stands an illogically serene figure — Bea Arthur, also known as Maude.

The problems with the shows have been regularly chronicled in the national and trade press. How Redd Foxx pulled a disappearing act from "Sanford and Son" and is still among the missing. How Demond Wilson of the same series also vanished but has since returned.

Then there is Carroll O'Connor, the inimitable Archie Bunker of "All in the Family," who has long grumbled about the show's working conditions and his salary, which has risen to a reported $25,000 because of his unrest.

BILL MACY, Miss Arthur's co-star on "Maude," contributed his share of controversy at a Television Academy Ball in honor of Lear and Yorkin, whose Tandem Productions created the three series. O'Connor and his "All in the Family" son-in-law, Rob Reiner, declined to appear, and Redd Foxx left in a huff.

Macy grabbed the microphone from Lear and shouted language never heard at a public event in Hollywood — except at a Friars Club stag.

"I'M SURE that everyone connected with these shows has some kind of beef going," remarks the statuesque Miss Arthur, whose gentle manner contrasts with the acerbic Maude. "I can understand why. I've never worked so hard in my life as I have on this show. It is a grueling schedule — grueling.

"But to be able to come up with a product that is certainly superior to nearly everything else on television — that makes it all worthwhile. I can't speak for the other shows, but, for me, 'Maude' is an absolute labor of love."

Bea Arthur fools you. You expect her to come on strong, like the liberated woman she portrays on television. But although she is firm in her beliefs, she is also retiring. She submits to interviews reluctantly — "I'm really a very private person."

SHE IS ALSO loyal. Norman Lear is "a friend I have known since 1959, and I don't consider him an employer; I believe he is the most brilliant comedy mind in the business."

She has harsh words for other series stars who have criticized him:

"If they do have complaints, they should not give them a public airing. You don't foul your own nest."

She suggested that Redd Foxx came out of the nightclub world and might lack the discipline for the five-day Yorkin-Lear schedules, with long rehearsals and performances before studio audiences.

AS FOR HER co-star Macy: "Bill is a character. He drove a cab most of his life and now at the age of 52 he finds himself a 'star,' in quotes.

"That night with the academy was the most horrendous of my life. Yet I'm convinced that Bill did not act out of hostility. He was simply overwhelmed by what has happened to him. He was in love with the world that night."

Bea Arthur is a New Yorker who came out of the same New School for Social Research drama workshop that produced Marlon Brando. She appeared in dozens of plays and musicals, winning a Tony as Vera Charles in "Mame." She repeated the role in the Lucille Ball movie, directed by Miss Arthur's husband, Gene Saks.

SHE ADMITTED that she is not your typical TV star — "the classic example being Donna Reed." Bea might have continued playing the leading lady's best friend except for "All in the Family" — "if it hadn't come along, the networks would never have presented an antiheroine."

She starts taping the third season of "Maude" on July 3. How long can the series last?

"I don't know and I don't care," Bea Arthur said. "But I hope we can quit on top. I couldn't live with defeat."

BEATRICE ARTHUR, as Maude, with Bill Macy (Walter Findlay) in scene from an episode of the CBS comedy series "Maude."

Lin Bolen leads way for women

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — Network vice presidents seem as abundant as Navy ensigns. But Lin Bolen, an NBC-TV vice president, tends to stand out and not just because she's a woman in a predominantly male bailiwick.

She's in charge of NBC's day-time programming, a critical field since the bulk of network revenues comes from those soap operas and game shows that critics love to rap and millions of housewives love to watch.

"PEOPLE HAVE often asked me, 'are you a token?'" laughed Miss Bolen, a small, intensive native of Benton, Ill., who earned her VP stripes last October. "Well, the word 'token' is nonexistent in my vocabulary.

"Because at this level, any level such as this, a network cannot afford a token. There's just no way a network or any major corporation can afford this sort of thing in a high job.

"Most network revenue is made in daytime programming. So they are not about to turn their profit center over to a token."

AT LAST REPORT, there were only seven women vice presidents at the three networks — one at ABC, two at CBS and four at NBC.

They hold such jobs as "broadcast standards and practices," "director of taxes," "information services," "planning, radio network" and "Western sales, television network."

But only the seventh, Miss Bolen, actually is up in the corporate towers deciding the shape, form and fate of programs we see on television. Why aren't more women in jobs of similar responsibility?

"THAT'S SIMPLY because most women have not been given the opportunity to prepare themselves," said Miss Bolen, who at 33 has broadcast credentials any man and woman in the business might envy.

How'd she get started? Like most career folk here, she arrived in Fun City at full gallop. After studying advertising at City College here, she went in the business of producing commercials.

Then came stints as a production executive on three ABC-TV documentaries, a Hollywood tour at Metromedia Producers Corp. where she helped develop new TV projects and then on to Universal, where she worked on children's programs that were on the drawing boards.

IN 1972, SHE shifted to NBC in Burbank, Calif., as a programming administrator, helping develop the so-called category of such evening programs as "NBC Mystery Movie."

She was hired by Herb Schlosser, then NBC's vice president for programming on the West Coast and now president of NBC's radio and television networks.

After five months on the job, she learned that the post of director, daytime programming for television, had opened up. It never had been held by a woman, but Miss Bolen is no shrinking violet, not now or then.

"I DIDN'T WANT to undersell what I felt my capabilities were. So I said, 'I hope you won't think I'm presumptuous, but I know the job of daytime director is open ... and I think I'm the person you're looking for.'"

She outlined her qualifications, came to New York for talks with network brass, then returned to Los Angeles and waited.

The good news came in September. When she took over the new job, was she worried about male chauvinism in the executive suite?

"About whether the men would accept me as an equal?" she asked. "No. I thought there may be some resistance initially because women have not been in high positions in this business for a long time.

"BUT WHAT HAPPENS inevitably—and it's always happened that way for me — is that people realize the 'name of the game is 'deliver.'

"And once you deliver, once people know you are responsible, that the most important thing for you is to get the job done and do it right, they accept you."

Miss Bolen said changing attitudes are going to "put an abundance of women in top jobs" at the networks within the next five years. Women executives will be the norm, not the exception.

'Mr. Wizard' wows collegians

GEORGE SEGAL finds time to build a personal life with Lee Remick while he is searching for a madman who has killed a number of women in the movie "No Way to Treat a Lady" at 9 p.m. Monday on Ch. 7.

By DALE F. MEAD
Ridder News Service

STANFORD, Calif. — It's Mr. Wizard!

And it was childhood revisited recently for an auditorium full of graduate science students when "Mr. Wizard" — Don Herbert — came to Stanford University.

Now 55, tanned and handsome with silver hair, witty and dramatic as ever, he wowed 'em.

"How many here have seen Mr. Wizard?" asked Prof. Arthur Schawlow before introducing Herbert. Virtually everyone in the near-full auditorium enthusiastically raised his hand. Schawlow had arranged for his friend to talk.

SCHAWLOW, co-inventor of the laser, starred in a science film made by Herbert after his "Mr. Wizard" television series ended a 15-year stint in 1965.

The show featured Herbert as Mr. Wizard, hosting a young boy or girl in a home or laboratory setting to explain some scientific subject — wind, bridges or electricity, for example.

During that Saturday morning half-hour, the youngster and host would play with a gamut of experiments using little more than materials found around the house.

"I'M REALLY an interpreter of science, not a scientist," he said. "When I go on 'The Tonight Show' (as a guest), they think I'm a scientist. When I meet people like Dr. Schawlow, they think I'm a television personality."

But he has had his impact. According to Schawlow, when word got around about Herbert's appearance, a number of students attributed their science careers to watching his show.

An English and general science major from a small college in Wisconsin, he tried writing radio scripts until a successful writer told him they were not very good and that he should home in on subjects in which he was sincerely interested.

PAUSING TO PONDER "what I would like to do with my life," he decided to do something that would appeal to children, something visual and creative that involved using his hands.

He dreamed up the science show and one day thought up the name "Mr. Wizard" while riding on an elevator with a friend. The pilot show attracted the support of the Cereal Institute which in turn convinced the NBC television network.

The program was launched in 1951 and eventually reached millions of viewers on 165 stations.

After the show was discontinued in 1965, Herbert's Prism Productions, Inc. got a new project. Grants from the Sloane Foundation and the National Science Foundation sponsored a set of eight films spotlighting scientists.

More recently the firm has done classrooms films, and Herbert also has written several books. Currently he is making still another film on nuclear energy.

Perhaps the nostalgia wrought by meeting his former fans in graduate school has gotten to Herbert. He is toying with the idea of beginning "Mr. Wizard" again in an updated version.

The BIBLE Says

Question: What about infant baptism?

The expression "infant baptism" is a misnomer because the ceremonial sprinkling of a few drops of water on a baby's head is not a baptism. In the Bible baptism is immersion. This is what the word means in the Bible. Since Baptism is immersion, and sprinkling is not immersion, sprinkling is not baptism. (Baptist people have known this for years).

The Bible does not teach that infants should be sprinkled or immersed. The Bible teaches that baptism must be preceded by faith (Mark 16:16). No one can be scripturally baptized until they believe the Gospel. This is one reason babies were not baptised in the apostolic age.

Babies do not need to be baptized. Baptism is for the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), and babies are sinless. Babies who die before reaching the age of responsibility are not lost, for they have never sinned. For the same reason babies do not need to be baptized.

Is infant sprinkling a harmless practice? Men and women who were sprinkled as children frequently live and die thinking they have been baptized as the Bible teaches. A practice is not harmless when it results in disobedience to a command of God. People who were sprinkled as babies need to obey the Gospel just as much as those who were never sprinkled. "Infant baptism" is NOT taught in the Bible.

JEWELERS FOR THREE GENERATIONS

Wells Report

Off to see the wizard

When historians of the future look back to ponder us and our times they will no doubt be bemused by our obsessive preoccupation with something called "image."

Like so much of our language these days, it is a term that comes to us from public relations. But it is rooted in a basic American concern of what the neighbors will think of us. Thomas Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence wrote about "a decent concern for the opinion of mankind." Modern PR types would have said he was concerned about our image. The housewife who gets up early after a party to put the liquor bottles in the neighbor's trash is similarly concerned about her image.

The trouble with the concept of image as used in public relations, however, is that it is concerned entirely with how the subject presents himself to and is seen by others, and very little if at all with who, what or how he actually is. When the public discovers that the image of a politician or a corporation does not represent reality, the politician or corporation promptly acquires something which public relations has also named. It's called a credibility gap.

These reflections are prompted by my reading the Nixon Transcripts, now the definitive document on the whole process of image making and breaking.

No man ever worked harder at making and projecting an image than Richard Nixon — although the Kennedys probably worked just as hard at it with more success. Presidents Truman and Eisenhower both achieved the presidency by accidents of history and saw no reason to appear to be other than they were. Truman swore genially and shot from the hip. Ike was affably lazy and saw no reason others couldn't mind the store while he played golf.

From the start, Nixon had trouble with his image. His early campaigns for office and the disclosure of the secret fund had left him tarnished and given him the nickname of Tricky Dicky. Time and again he started over on his image problem, and the "New Nixon" was announced to the public. By his own count, Nixon's career embraced six crises -- and after each crisis there was a new start on image building.

He has told us himself in his book about his excessive concern with image during the time of President Eisenhower's illness when Nixon was vice president. He tells of his public appearances, the need to appear cheerful, yet not too cheerful because that might be construed as anticipating his succession. Each smile, each gesture had to be consciously weighed, he wrote.

Before and during the 1960 campaign, Theodore White tells us, the Nixon managers "discussed consciously and in detail" the matter of his "national image." But in 1960 he ran into John F. Kennedy, Young Prince Cool, the master image-builder.

White, in covering Nixon in 1960, was struck by the strange things about the image of a man "so interested in 'imagery.'"

One builds an image through the media. But Nixon early decided the press was his enemy. He turned to television, but on the high-contrast black-and-white screens of the day, his deep eyewells and heavy brows made him appear a mixture of Andre Gromyko and Rudolph Hess. In contrast to Kennedy's calm equanimity, Nixon was volatile — relaxed and radiant with cheering audiences, uncertainly sad or harshly strident with hostile crowds.

Not until 1968, when he ran against Hubert Humphrey, a man with image problems of his own, did Nixon achieve a sympathetic image with the American people. Yet, even here it was a tentative, wary acceptance based more on the fact he was President than that he was Richard Nixon.

He seemed to know that and accept it. He ran for reelection not as Richard Nixon but as the President. And since he had not successfully achieved an image of his own, he reverted to the strategy of his earliest days and devoted himself to destroying the image of his opponent. The voters responded with a comment often heard before the 1972 election: "Well, I'm no big Nixon fan, but I can't buy that other guy."

Now in the P,D,H and E dialogues of the Nixon Transcripts the problem of the Nixon image is finally solved. The New Nixon and the Old Nixon disappear. The Real Nixon, if there is one, seems to be, in the words of Newsweek magazine, "a muddled thinker, a rambling talker, a waffling executive ... who instead of presiding at these critical discussions defers continuously to his subordinates."

One is reminded of that classic scene in the movie version of the Wizard of Oz, where Dorothy and her friends having survived the perils of the quest, finally are ushered into the awesome presence of the wizard — and find him to be an insecure, indecisive little man playing frantically on the monstrous console of his image machine.

Q: Has Leslie Caron made any new films? As a frequently married French actress, what does she think of men? And who's she married to now?—Mrs. Kevin O. M., Des Moines, Iowa.

A: Producer Michael Laughlin, her third husband is starring his wife in Open Shadow. Miss Caron, one of the more outspoken of femme fatales, is quoted as saying, "I only go to bed with people I'm in love with. I'm not bragging. I haven't the slightest idea what the public thinks of me—and I don't care. If a married man has a lover, a wife can have one too."

Q: I don't remember ever seeing Queen Elizabeth photographed when she wasn't carrying a purse. What's in it? Credit cards, extra pair of pearl earrings and necklace, an identity card? Also why don't the ladies-in-waiting lug the stuff for her?— Grace Dickinson, Whately, Mass.

A: On Buckingham Palace stationery comes this cryptic but frustrating response from Susan Hussey, one of the ladies-in-waiting: "I write to thank you for your letter and to explain to you that I am afraid it is not possible to give you the information for which you ask."

Q: I claim that Joe Louis, when he was heavyweight champion, also made a movie like the one Muhammad Ali is going to. Am I right?—Cathy-Ann R., Omaha, Neb.

A: Yes. The Brown Bomber made his debut in Spirit of Youth for Grand National Studios in 1937. P.S. He once conceded he was more nervous facing the cameras than the challengers.

Q: To whom is actress Ann Blyth married?—J.D., Columbus, Ohio.

A: In one of Hollywood's most fashionable weddings, Ann became the June (1953) bride of Dr. James McNulty, a noted obstetrician and the brother of Dennis Day. Though the mother of five children, Mrs. McNulty still finds time to perform in summer stock two months a year and remain active in numerous charitable activities.

Q: Is it true that President Eisenhower was a licensed pilot?—E. P. Dutton, Sacramento

A: Yes. Ike, who learned to fly in 1939 when he was a lieutenant colonel on General MacArthur's staff in the Philippines, was issued pilot's license No. 93,258 a few months later.

American Independent Party: alternative on the right

By MARION MAUK

George Shea, party chairman for San Bernardino County, states it openly when he takes his turn behind the small speakers' lectern with its signs Keep Wheat, Ship Dick and You Didn't Want McGovern Now Can't Stand Nixon. Join the American Indpendent Party.

"Eventually and maybe even this year we're going to take control of this state," he says, giving voice to the kind of upbeat feeling that is in the air in the big, gracious old house in San Marino, where some 50 or more of the party faithful from four counties are gathered.

The American Independent Party that grew out of the 1967-68 presidential campaign of Gov. George Wallace of Alabama averaged 3.3 per cent of the vote in its local races in 1972 after taking but 1 per cent in the last gubernatorial race two years earlier. And if pinned down with a pointed question about election chances of its candidates, party leaders talk about the creation of a new political structure being "a longterm process. We all know that." But with Watergate and the energy crisis and taxes and "the American people fed up with the things that are happening to them," the feeling that this year there may be "a real chance" keeps popping up, giving an optimistic glow to the potluck dinner in San Marino.

William K. Shearer, 43, national party chairman, is in fine fettle this Saturday evening as he moves among the party faithful, making a point with a joke or telling one for its own sake. Tall (6 feet 1) and affable in dark blue suit, blue figured tie and striped shirt, he has slightly receding hair and mustache of light reddish-brown. In the seven years since he led the drive to get George Wallace and the American Independent Party on the ballot in California he has been involved in chronic battles for control of the party leadership and direction. Lately things have been going his way.

He gives his views in an easy but forceful drawl that despite its folksy, southern cast was born and bred in California.

The recent gasoline shortage was "a rip-off for the oil companies," he says. No he doesn't believe windfall profits taxes and rollbacks are the solution. "I believe in free enterprise. But I don't think free enterprise is the power of big business to use government to milk the average man and that's what I think is going on. They say the government is independent of the oil companies. Nonsense."

He is for impeachment. "The suppression of criminal evidence was the thing that really convinced me. And this business with the tape. Eighteen minutes of silence!"

He is disturbed by the abuse of authority by the government. "This siccing the IRS on people because they don't agree with the president. Burglarizing a psychiatrist's office. They tore up the Fourth Amendment."

No, he doesn't know what Wallace is going to do in 1976. "But we're for him. If the governor would like to run on our ticket he need only say so."

Would the party support him if he were a candidate on the Democratic ticket? "We would have to evaluate." However, he is confident that the Democrats will never give Wallace the nomination.

"There isn't anybody in this world that likes the governor any better than I do," he says. "Pretty nearly every time he opens his mouth he speaks for me,no question about that."

Nevertheless, he makes it clear that he has never regarded the new party as simply a vehicle for Wallace's presidential aspirations. Both Democratic and Republican parties "are controlled fundamentally by the same kind of interests," he says. "A new political party is needed to express certain viewpoints and that is independent of what may happen to any individual candidate."

It is a point on which he fought with Wallace campaign people in California in 1968.

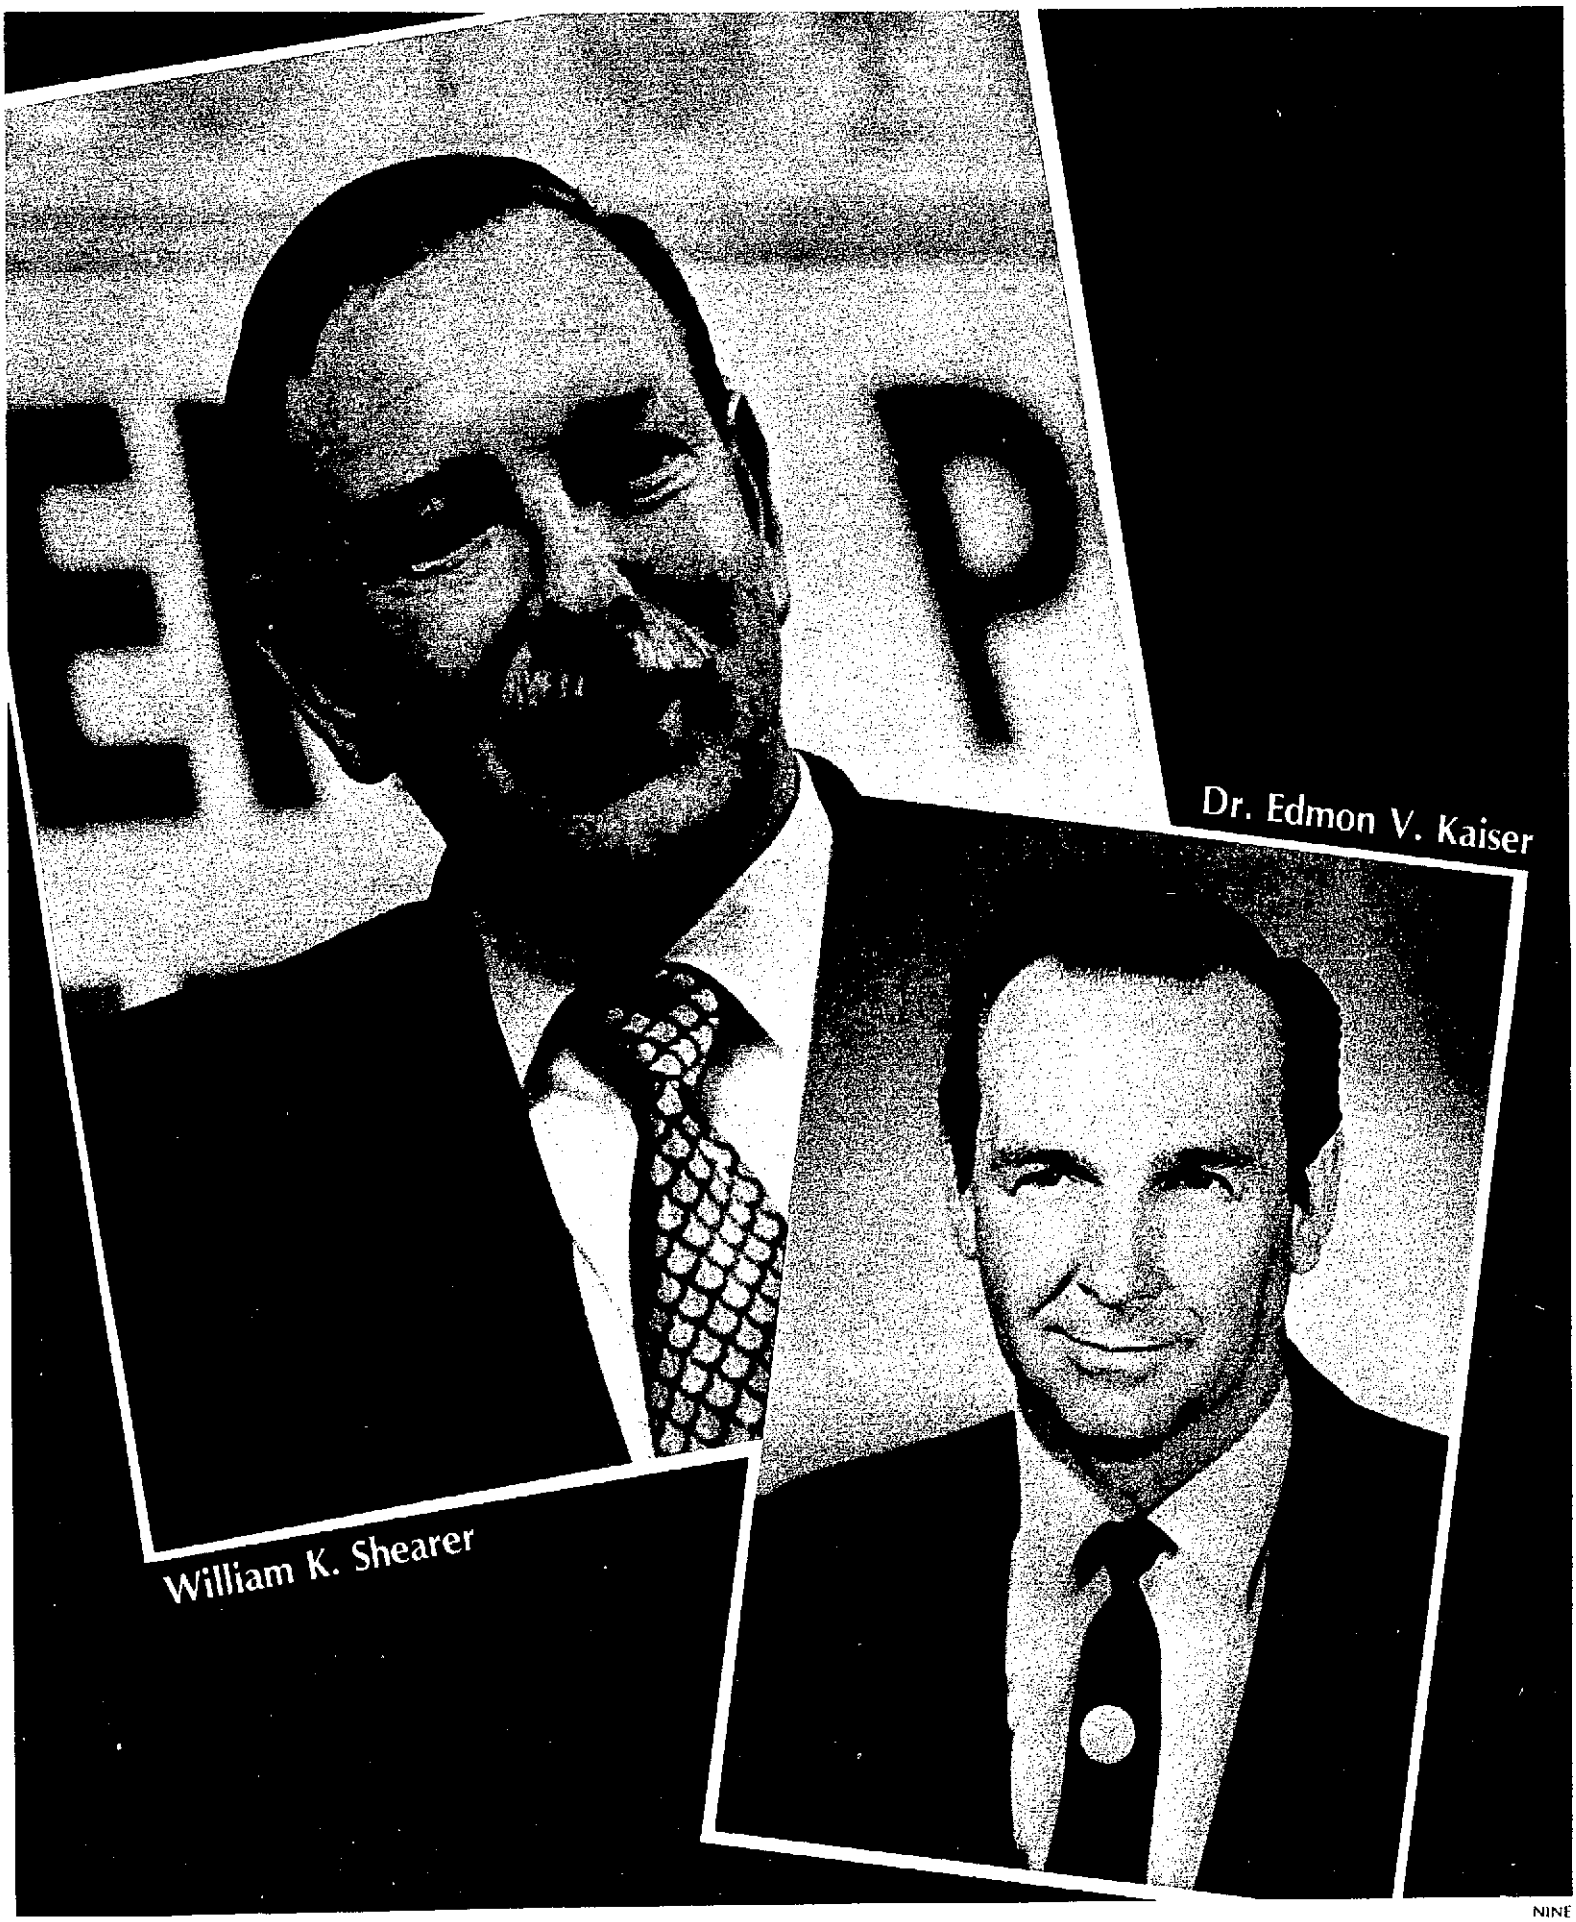

Central to the viewpoints expressed by the "constitutionist conservatives," as party leaders call themselves, is a drastic reduction in the power and activities of the federal government and free enterprise without governmental subsidies or competition. Among the specific demands in the platform is elimination of the federal income tax.

"A lot of our people are tax rebels," Shearer says, making it clear that he pays his taxes. "Now you may say that's bad — defying the government. But is that any worse than these people who are making the most money in America today who aren't paying any taxes or people like Nixon cheating on their returns."

Both Shearer and his wife, Eileen, who was formerly a political figure in Republican state politics in her own right and is now the national head of the American Independent Party women's groups, have come up for the San Marino meeting from their home in Lemon Grove in San Diego County, where they have an 11-year-old daughter and a small advertising business. Shearer also runs a political consulting business, gets out a monthly publication, The California Statesman, which serves as party newsletter. And in his spare time attends to the 35 fruit trees on his property.

Nearly a dozen party candidates have shown up for the meeting. Some of the newcomers to campaigning obviously are not yet comfortable in their roles. Some of the more experienced are still defensive about their educational qualifications as they speak to the audience that gathers after dinner in the big living room.

"People keep asking me why I'm running," young Bakersfield matron Alberta Procell, candidate for lieutenant governor, says. "I'm sick and tired of being told a common person doesn't know what is good for them."

There is considerable talk by the speakers about a need for common sense in public affairs and some lashing out at "the lawyers and professors that are running the show."

"The pointy-headed intellectuals," Jack McCoy, candidate for the U.S. Senate, calls them, taking up the term coined by Wallace. "They pulled the slickest con game in history by taking simple basic truths and making them so complex that the citizen no longer believes he can understand these things and has got to leave it in the hands of experts."

A slightly built man with receding dark hair, a Charlie Chaplin mustache, tan sport coat and dark turtleneck shirt, he is a flamboyant speaker and apparently one of the party's tax rebels. ("I personally repealed the 16th amendment three years ago," he says.)

"Many of you have a better grip on some of the facts and statistics than I have. After all, what have you got a right to expect from a house painter?" McCoy says in a loud, jovial voice before going on to flay "the Republicrats" who "pray 'Our father who art in Washington.'"

Then big Bill Shearer is behind the speaker's lectern, reassuring them they are just what the country's founding fathers had in mind as legislators.

"There will be people, no doubt, who will say our candidates are not as polished speakers, that they don't have in their background a certain number of academic degrees — and I can talk about that because they had to skin a sheep for me some years ago." The booming voice becomes more folksy. "The thing you want to remember is those aren't negative factors in this party. They're plus factors because they tell you that these candidates came from where government ought to come from — from the people."

They won't have to campaign alone, he reassures them. He will be backing them.

Unlike many of the activists in the new party, Shearer is not only an enthusiastic but an experienced campaigner with some 25 years of activity in politics. He majored in political science at San Diego State, took part in his first campaign at 18 and by his mid-20s was in Washington, D.C., as legislative aide to Republican Congressman James Utt, ultra-conservative from Orange County. He was twice a Republican nominee for the state legislature and in 1964 was a leader in the campaign for Proposition 14, designed to nullify the Rumford Act prohibitions against discrimination in housing. He provided the expertise for getting the CLEAN amendment on the ballot in 1966.

During the evening meeting there are repeated expressions of hostility to welfare recipients ("People with their hand out, people looking for something for nothing") although exception is made for the aged and disabled.

But the object of greatest hostility (and greatest audience interest) is Cesar Chavez, head of the United Farm Workers. "Many of our so-called liberal Catholic bishops have been supporting Chavez," George Shea, who has been working against Chavez in the Coachella Valley, notes. "But as a Catholic, as a Christian and an American I defy this . . . It is his job to destroy and bring to its knees the tremendous business of market gardening and place it in the hands of federal control. The same job that Ralph Nader has in industry."

(Suspicion of Nader's motives is not universal in the party, it should be noted. "Nader doesn't bother me," says Merwyn H. Hemp, chairman of the Los Angeles County Central Committee, who presided over the meeting. "Maybe we need gadflies.")

But the party, influenced by its activists in the state's central valley farming areas, not only opposes Chavez but has planks in its platform supporting the grower-sought importation of braceros and elimination of the 160-acre limitation on farms for government water.

The American Independent Party includes in its membership what its gubernatorial candidate Dr. Edmon V. Kaiser calls "a lot of members of the John Birch Society," the ultra-conservative organization that achieved notoriety in the past for its lavish labeling of public figures as Communist. And fears that "the Communist conspiracy" is influential in the country are still alive and well in the party and in its platform. People don't talk about anti-communism so much today for fear of being ridiculed, says Assembly candidate Dick Marshall, who calls himself "a true-conservative and true pro-American." ("I play patriotic music once in a while. I still salute the flag. Friends who come over think I'm weird.")

Nevertheless, Jim Griffin, Norwalk truck driver who is a candidate for Congress, adds to the conspiracy theories in conversation after the formal meeting breaks up. "I think Kissinger's another agent for the Russians and the Communists and I think he will be drawn into the Watergate thing," he says. "I think the Watergaters — Nixon and Mitchell and them — engineered the Wallace shooting. I think that's common thought among party members."

Eileen Shearer, asked about this, disagrees. "Many people think it wasn't an individual action because of Bremer's being seen all over the country for long periods of time with no really visible means of support. But to say it was Nixon and Mitchell — there's nothing to base that on.

"There's a bitterness in our party with the Nixon-Mitchell thing because of the $10,000 they sent out here to try to get our party off the ballot. It all came out in the Watergate hearings."

Dr. Edmon V. Kaiser, chiropractor from Fremont in Northern California, who is the party candidate for governor, did not attend the San Marino dinner. But he gives his views in an interview in the small party office in Redondo Beach later. Forty-eight, his black and gray hair traditionally cut, Kaiser is a slightly built 5 feet 7, with a voice that waxes querulously indignant as he talks about elections that give voters "a choice between Socialist A and Socialist B". But as he warms up to his subject, calling President Nixon "a liberal Socialist" and California "the pilot state leading us into a Socialist hell", he seems to have the phrasing and fire that on a podium in larger quarters could deliver a forceful diatribe against things as they are.

His top priority, he says, is to get rid of the federal income tax, which he sees as "a Marxist instrument." He feels so strongly about this that he states that if the proposed amendment to eliminate the income tax ("the Liberty Amendment") could be passed by enough states his first year as governor that "most of the problems that beset us would be solved before my first term was up."

Along with repeal of the income tax he emphasizes his opposition to "the revenue sharing swindle" and other "federal aid."

Kaiser took his first public political step just 10 years ago — as chairman for Democrats for Goldwater in his area in Northern California. Raised as a Democrat to think Franklin D. Roosevelt was "about the greatest man since Jesus Christ," by the time he had changed his mind he "couldn't see that the Republicans with guys like Senator Kuchel and Earl Warren and the mighty Eisenhower" were any better than the Democrats, so he had remained in the Democratic Party. In 1966 he contributed to Friends of Ronald Reagan. But he gave the Democrats one last chance that year by running for Congress — unsuccessfully — in the Democratic primary.

Reagan's administration was "a disappointment" to him. "Reagan has double crossed us just about the same as every other governor we've had," he says. And in 1967 with the newly forming American Independent Party he found a political home.

He is a state officer in the National Association to Keep and Bear Arms, and, along with the party platform, is opposed to gun control. Also to the United Nations, sex education courses in the schools and abortion. He is for cutting welfare drastically. And with other party spokesmen is against public money supporting rapid transit.

Were he elected, minority groups, who think they have problems, would find a deaf ear in Sacramento. He sees no minority problems other than "dissatisfaction" generated "by people who want to divide the American people against ourselves."

A deaf ear to minorities is traditional in the party. Issues with racial overtones had a significant impact on the formation of the party, as Shearer has said. Wallace, who had a national reputation as a segregationist, was its central figure.

In California the campaign to get on the ballot was led by Shearer, who in the mid-60s was a founder of the California branch of the blatantly anti-Negro citizens councils. The party platform today takes a stand against "so-called civil rights laws."

The party Shearer heads today is only one faction of the forces that campaigned together in the presidential campaigns of 1968 and 1972. The third party conservatives have been split into factions almost constantly since their appearance on the political scene. Shortly before the 1972 campaign, the two then existing national parties merged to support Wallace. The party infighting began again not long after Wallace was shot and John Schmitz of Anaheim, then a congressman, and Tom Anderson of Tennessee were named as the party nominees for president and vice president.

Both Schmitz and Anderson were members of the John Birch Society. That year Birch Society members took control of the national campaign forces and in post-election months began to establish control of the American Party, as the national organization was called. (Party critics of this grab for power are careful to distinguish between Birch Society members who were already "good party members" and those who moved in to gain control of the party during this period.) Tom Anderson defeated Shearer for chairmanship of the national party that year and subsequently previously recognized representatives from several states were replaced by others, said to be members of the Birch Society.

A new party constitution and "permanent platform freezing party power and principles into the hands of those at the top of the hierarchy were proposed. The new platform, among other planks, called for the elimination of public schools and the denial of the right to vote in federal elections to every federal government employe. It deplored as regretable a sizeable list of private acts including "overindulgence in coffee, chain smoking . . . and flirting with strange women."

Shearer has a long record of participation in right wing politics, as has his wife, who charged that the Republican Party had been taken over by "the eastern liberal element," when she resigned her membership in the Republican State Central Committee and chairmanship of the Southern Division of the Federation of Republican Women in 1967, a few days before Shearer left the party. (She had been a top worker in unsuccessful efforts to elect as chairman of the National Federation of Republican Women Phyllis Schafly, whose books have been promoted by right wing anti-Communist crusaders.)

But Shearer saw the proposed American Party platform as political disaster. "The people in this country expect to have public schools," he says. "And if Tom Anderson is going to tell my postman he can't vote, he's going to go alone."

Charging that the proposed platform was making the party look "ridiculous" and that its advocates were "a country club clique" interested in "mere ideology" rather than a genuine political movement, he led a large faction out of the organization to set up a separate party structure under the name American Independent Party. Last September at a meeting in Columbia, S.C., he was named national chairman. The new organization represents the party organizations in eight of the 12 states in which the party is qualified for position on the ballot, he says.

Part of the differences in the American Party were said to be due to an elitist attitude among Birch Society members, who wanted to rid the party of its dirt farmer and blue collar image. "They actually look down on the members who formed and built the party," says Los Angeles County Central Committee Chairman Hemp. (Schmitz himself, who went back to the Republican Party in early 1973, was reported to have referred to Wallace forces as "Okies," "too grass rootsy" and "apes.") The trouble with that philosophy is that there are just a lot more blue collar workers and dirt farmers than there are Birchers. You can't build a party by rejecting people."

In California intraparty fighting is largely over, according to Hemp, although five dissenters filed as candidates for Assembly — only one of them in contest with a representative of the Shearer faction, however. The candidacy of Dr. Kaiser, who was part of Shearer's opposition in the 1970 election, is said to have helped unite the state party. Shearer told the San Marino audience that "your friends and mine" would be in 80 per cent of the delegate seats at the August state party convention.

There Shearer will no doubt be in top form. For whatever the election results in November Shearer is looking forward to the campaign. He's been getting calls from people "all around the country" asking him to speak and plans to campaign "lots."

"I'll go wherever I can," he says happily. "I like to campaign. I've even lost my excess fat. In even-numbered years I get lean and sharp-like so I can run around and campaign. I like to campaign and fight all day and celebrate all night. Just ask my wife." □

The littlest huckster

By KAY HOLMES

Nobody looks down on Mason Reese. He may only stretch to 3 feet 8 in stocking feet, but this eight-year-old has presence.

His carrot red hair and 35-year-old face make him look like Arthur Godfrey. His voice and manner suggest a formidable sophistication. Nobody would ever dare call him sonny.

For Mason Reese is one of the most successful hucksters of our times. He could, one thinks, sell snow to Eskimos. The Brooklyn Bridge might be just a little bit harder. Edsels — no problem.

And when he sells stuff — mostly food — he also sells himself. His uncanny credibility must make the Administration moan. In the immortal words of someone, you gotta believe this kid.

His talents have not gone unsung. He won a Clio, the Oscar of commercials, as best male actor last year . . . and 'borgasmord' became a revered word in advertising circles. He became a personality to be profiled, a talk show co-host, a reporter for NBC. He even wrote his memoirs. All in his seventh year.

Kay Holmes is a New York freelance writer.

Mason's precocity is legendary. (When Dick Cavett asked him if he was sure he wasn't a midget, Mason replied, "Absolutely not, are you?') So is his perspicacity. On his first commercial job he was told to pick up a box of cornflakes and "Smile, smile, smile." "What," the four-year-old Mason asked, "is so funny about cornflakes?"

He once threw a rubber rat at an interviewer and told another one he was trying to pick his brains.

Meeting Mason Reese could have been a harrowing experience. But it was not. He is a warm, cuddly little boy, with a lot of mirth and mischief in him. He likes comics and milkshakes, peanut butter sandwiches and Batman. He likes spy shows and karate and running really fast. Most of all he likes magic, which he explained authoritatively, started "about 6,000 years ago, before I was born."

Mason doesn't like homework and diets and hanging up his coat all the time. He wishes parents did not outsmart kids all the time.

In short, he is a lot like other kids. Only he's famous. He's been mobbed in Macy's, pinched and pulled and mauled by matrons, felt his eyeballs turn blue with the explosion of flashbulbs.

But he's survived. And secretly, because he is a full-fledged Aries child, he's enjoyed it all. Well, most of it.

Mason does not usually grant interviews in his home. He likes his privacy, he said. But he made an exception, as we are neighbors, and I was invited to his parents' elegant, nine-room apartment in Manhattan's Upper West Side.

Mason was watching television when I arrived. He got up from the floor, we shook hands, and I said how glad I was to meet him. He said, "Be good."

His pretty, red-haired mother made a pot of tea and we sat down to watch the video tapes of Mason on the Mike Douglas Show. After one appearance he was asked to come back and be co-host for a week. It was very soon apparent why.

For Mason Reese and Mike Douglas have a very special relationship. Mason talks about Mike with a lot of love and admiration. He says if he has his own talk show when he grows up, he'll ask Mike to be his co-host.

Their friendship is built on a frank foundation and it had a few bumps along the way. For instance, in the beginning, Mike called Mason "son" a lot.

...he could sell Edsels

"Please don't call me son," Mason said.

Mike apologized and explained that he had daughters and he's always wanted a son.

"Well, you ain't taking me," came the retort.

Once during the show Mason called Mike crazy and indicated his displeasure in other ways. Toward the end of the week Mason recited a poetic apology. And he was so full of remorse that he burst into tears.

On the last night Mike asked Mason if he enjoyed the week, and Mason said it was joyful. "And just to prove how wonderful it was . . . now you can call me son."

Before Mason went on the Mike Douglas Show for the very first time he had a scary experience. He'd clocked many hours on camera and said he liked it most because he learned how to play craps with the film crew. But that time he had stage fright.

"When someone said there was a little boy backstage crying, I thought it couldn't be Mason," his mother Sonia recalled. "But when they said a little red-headed boy I knew it must be he.

"Bill (his father) and I told him he didn't have to go on if he didn't want to. We were only 75 miles from home and we could turn right around and go back.

"Everything was all set. The crew was getting impatient. And I told Mason he'd have to make a decision."

"How can a seven year-old make a decision?" he said.

"I asked him if he wanted Daddy to make the decision for him. Bill told Mason that he could promise him that whatever he was feeling now he wouldn't be feeling like that at all after he'd been on stage 30 seconds. He went on and you've just seen the results."

Mason wandered in with his Lego blocks, sat down and watched the rest of the video tapes. He was wearing brown trousers, a tan sweater and a happy face. He told me when the best bits were coming up and chuckled delightedly at some of his witticisms. His mother said he doesn't usually watch himself on television but he likes to relive the moments with Mike Douglas.

"Mommy, can you get me something to drink? I'm thirsty."

Sonia said she would but then began wrestling with a recalcitrant tape. "Why don't you get your own orange juice, darling?"

"No, you do it."

That is the sort of exchange which interviewers have pounced upon to prove that Mason Reese is a spoiled brat. But I would suggest they haven't been around eight-year-olds lately. Significantly, when Mason wanted lunch and his mother was deep in conversation, he went off to make his own peanut butter sandwich without a murmur.

Mason came over with a deck of cards, put them on the arm of the chair and began shuffling an imaginary deck. He shuffled and cut and then held out the imaginary deck for me to select one.

"Memorize it and tell me what it is," he commanded.

"The seven of diamonds."

"Okay," he said, picking up the real deck. I'm going to find it in this deck and it's going to be upside down." The back of the card, so its face would not be showing.

Alas. He went through the deck and there was the seven of diamonds rightside up like all the others. Mason made a face and then did it again. The third time he was lucky. You can't win them all.'

Mason's interest in magic is only about a year old. Each time he does a job his parents give him $8.99 for a new magic trick. He has a silk scarf that turns into a wand, wool balls that can penetrate tin cups and a salt shaker that never runs out of salt. And, of course, a deck of cards.

His mother thinks he is psychic

He would like to be a magician when he grows up. That is if he isn't hosting his own talk show.

"Is it hard learning all those commercials?" I ask tentatively, not wanting to interrupt the mini-maestro. I'm thinking particularly of the Betcha Bacon tongue twister, "Blissful bacon flavors baked in every box of Betcha Bacon. Betcha when you buy a box, you'll betcha wish you bought a batch."

"No," said Mason. "When I was four and a half I did the first Ivory Snow commercial. My mother almost fainted when she saw the script. It was two pages long and I didn't know how to read that well. I learned it in 10 minutes flat."

Mason seems to do a lot of things in 10 minutes flat. Now that he's older and in the third grade at a Montessori school, he's probably gained on that speed. He has the reading ability of a 10th grader. But his favorite subject is math.

"Whatever happens," Mason announced, "I'm going to watch Get Smart at 1:30. That's my favorite program. It's a spy show. I like Batman, too. He's not a spy. He's a superhero. He's a member of the Justice League of America."

"Really?"

"You don't know what the Justice League is," said Mason.

"No, I don't. Do you?"

We drop the subject and I remember Sonia said her son was psychic. When he took the Rhine ESP test, he got 11 out of 25 cards right. The law of chance would have netted him a score of five. Hmmmm.

"I have girlfriends," he said. Of course, he's a boy of the world. And he's certainly not shy. One of his girlfriends at school is also his bodyguard. If ever the bigger boys come over with ill intent, she kisses them. It has proved an effective deterrent thus far.

His favorite girl is Erica, the daughter of his father's business partner. They met when Mason was three and Erica was two ... in a paddling pool.

"Erica has brown hair and big brown eyes and I like her a lot. She's smart. We don't fight very much but she doesn't like magic. She wants to marry me; at least she used to."

The problem has been the appearance of another suitor, Billy, who is bulging with muscles. Now whenever Erica and Mason have a fight, Erica says Billy will knock his block off. Mason is practicing his karate.

Erica is featured in his memoirs, written in cahoots with Lynn Haney, and published by Dodd, Mead and Co. this month.

"I wrote the book."

"No, you didn't, dear," corrected Sonia. "You lived the book."

"I wrote the book in my head. I told her what to write."

Mason's memoirs are the first auxillary product of his fame. His parents have turned down three T-shirt manufacturers and a big Caribbean hotel that wanted Mason just to be there at Christmas time ... with a plane at his disposal.

Both Bill and Sonia Reese are trying to keep Mason's childhood intact. His jobs are limited to two a month and he hasn't accepted West Coast talk show offers because of his school work. While others, such as the producer of the Underwood Chicken Spread (borgasmord) commercial, compare him to Peter Ustinov and Orson Welles, his parents are trying to keep him unstar struck.

A television series is being written for him and a producer is coming from England with a film idea. But the Reeses are keeping a low profile on both projects.

They never discuss money in front of Mason. He thinks he's paid $30 a commercial. "I have seen kids in show business talk about residuals, compare what they're earning and talk about prospects. I don't want that to happen to Mason," Sonia said.

All that is revealed is that Mason's savings account is in five figures and it's being kept for his college education and what one would expect to be a rather fine 21st birthday present.

"If we found that acting was affecting his life negatively and he was becoming just a smart-ass kid, we'd stop it," Bill said. "Our concern is for him not to lose the values we feel are important. It's difficult, too, because as his parents we get caught up in it."

"I want Mason to retain his sensitivity ... to be an open person not afraid of being hurt," Sonia added. "I want him to be able to take it. I want to prepare him for a realistic world."

Mason was eager to do one of his imitations. The one on President Nixon to be precise.

"No," said Sonia firmly. "People don't like an eight year-old to make political comments or statements without anything to back it up."

"But it's for people who don't like Nixon," replied Mason. "She doesn't like Nixon."

"You should keep that imitation for your peers."

"I don't hate him personally. I just hate his work," Mason said.

The answer was no. Mason agreed to a compromise. He could tell the joke about three young men saving President Nixon from drowning in the Potomac. They were rewarded with anything they wished for. The third one asked to be buried in Arlington Cemetery because he was sure he'd be killed when his father found out who he'd fished out of the river.

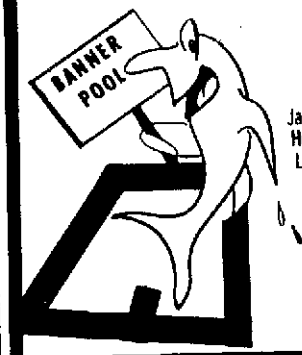

We talked about what sort of animal he'd like to be. He said he'd choose between an alligator and a dog. Did he want to be an alligator because of its big mouth?

Mason giggled. "I have that already. No, because I'd be so big."

He thought it would be nice to be a dog and be walked everyday. In fact he'd like to have a dog but his dad doesn't approve of

'I don't think of him as extraordinary' dogs in apartment buildings. "Maybe we couldn't walk it. We work too much."

"Lanny is allergic to dogs," Sonia said.

Lanny is Mason's eldest brother. He's 18 and Mason calls him Brother X because "he beats me up." However the relationship must have its sweet moments because when Lanny went for his drivers' test, he asked Mason if he wouldn't like to come along to soften up the instructor.

Then there's Mark, 17, and sister Suky, 16, who seems to be the favorite. Suky is the secretary of Mason's fan club. Letters vary from 30 to 100 a week, depending on how recent his television appearances have been.

Mason retired to make his peanut butter sandwich lunch. When he was out of earshot, I asked, "How does it feel to have such an extraordinary child?"

"I don't think of him as extraordinary. I just enjoy him," Sonia said. "I enjoy the way his mind works."

Both she and Bill have a host of Mason stories. One is a remark which Mason made when he saw a motorcycle speed by. "The Honda is quicker than the eye." said Mason.

Another time mother and son were walking home after a particularly rough day at school. Sonia listend sympathetically but tried to interject positive thoughts. She's a great believer in positive thinking.

Finally he looked up at her and said, "Frankly, Mommy, your positivity is not getting through to my negativity."

"He's not a brain in the sense of a young kid that plays the stock market or an egghead who reads the New York Times. He is a child with a gift. Almost since he's been born he's had this Pied Piper quality with people."

Perhaps that's why when Mason was just two, a neighbor in the apartment building suggested that Mason do commercials. Her child was in commercials and she thought Mason would be perfect. She'd happily give Sonia her agent's number. Bill and Sonia waited two years and then took her up on it. The rest is history.

Not only did Mason make award-winning commercials but he became the youngest reporter for NBC's Six O'Clock News. He reported with authority on the first day of school, FAO Schwarz, Wacky Packs and elephants . . . and other children's interest news. But then NBC changed its policy and ruled a newsman couldn't make commercials. Mason took off his mike and went home.

Like most celebrities Mason has caused a bit of controversy. Some people think he's gorgeous and some think he's obnoxious. A number of people have opined that putting a child in commercials is, at best, utter folly.

"That's one thing about New York," Sonia said with a rueful smile. "In other places people tell me how much they love Mason. In New York they tell me how to raise him."

Sonia Reese, a very warm, charming woman, explained philosophically why she thought some people criticized them.

"People just want to believe the worst. They are negative because when someone attains a certain level of success, they want them to pay for it.

"You do pay for it in terms of privacy. When Mason and I were caught in the middle of a rainstorm, we soon had a crowd of people around us."

"Sometimes people get overbearing," Bill said. "They forget that Mason is not a puppy dog; he's a human being. They think because he's only a little boy they can pinch and squeeze him."

"But if you had a child who was brilliant in math, for instance, wouldn't you try to channel it?" Sonia asked.

"Sure we have hesitations about his fame," she said. "But I think we have it under control at the moment. I treat the whole thing as an adventure. So far it's been fun. And the clue is not to take yourself too seriously. If you take yourself or this business seriously you're in trouble."

Although his parents are obviously very proud of Mason they don't pretend he's an angel. He has gotten into trouble at school when he mischieviously locked the toilet doors on the inside and crawled out underneath. And at the age of six he "robbed" his brother Mark's bank of $70.

Mark was going to a school where you pay tuition every week because the principal thinks it makes everybody see that education costs a lot of money. One night when Mark was out on a date, Mason sneaked into the room and made off with the loot. When he flashed his wad to impress a girlfriend at school the next day, he was turned in to the teacher.

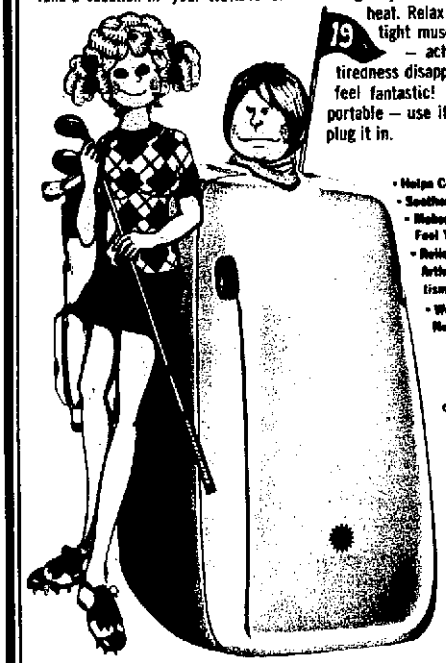

When he got home he had to apologize to Mark. And then the heavy sentence. He had to go to Mark's school the next day and apologize to Mark's teacher, who, according to Mason, was 6 feet 4 sitting down. He cried and cried but it didn't do any good. He had to do it. After it was all over he was congratulated on his courage by the still huge but not so formidable teacher.

"I really enjoy Mason," Sonia said. "But I don't want to sound like an Edgar Guest poem. It's almost as if I have to apologize for having a nice, sensitive little boy.

"I don't want to sound goodie, goodie. And I don't want to make people die of treacle sweet poisoning — yich! But I think you have a responsibility to share your good fortune. That is what my parents taught me and I hope my children will feel the same way when they grow up." □

QUEEN AND HER MAIDS

Looking for their 1,000th win

By JOHN TABOR

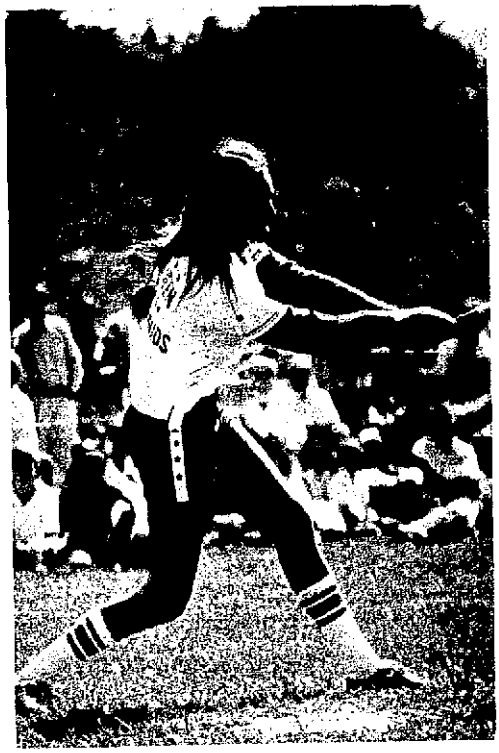

Imagine, if you will, a midsummer afternoon at gleaming Veterans' Stadium in Philadelphia. High in the stands, you hear the buzz of 35,000 fans waiting in anticipation. The giant scoreboard flashes a welcome to the "Queen and Her Maids," and four tiny, red, white, and blue clad figures emerge from the dugouts far below. Through the park address system, the game announcer introduces coach Royal Beaird, and, with a cordial Southern drawl, the stocky, middle-aged Texan Beaird presents, from Rolling Hills, Calif., the world's greatest female softball team.

However improbable it may seem, you musn't doubt the word of Royal Beaird. Lacking the proverbial nine sons in a row, he formed the world's most incredible (if not in fact its best) softball team around his daughters. Having guided the Maids to victory in more than 95 per cent of their games, his record as a coach exceeds the marks of Vince Lombardi and the winning streaks of John Wooden.

If girls had the same opportunities to excel in sports as boys, Beaird believes, they could make fine athletes, and his players prove his point. Using only a pitcher, catcher, first baseman and shortstop, the "Fabulous Four" travel across both North and South America. They hold victories over championship nine-man teams, including an all-star squad of Atlanta Braves, and this season, their tenth, they will notch their 1,000th win. "In every respect," says Beaird, "the girls are masters at what they do."

The most feared pitcher in softball today, Beaird's daughter, Rosie Black, has compiled a total of 994 wins, with only 42 defeats. Since Ripley's Believe It or Not featured the "12-year-old pitching prodigy" 10 years ago, Rosie has struck out some 18,250 batters, 3,108 of them while pitching blindfolded. Her victims include such stars as Willie Mays and Ed Kranepool, hero of the 1969 World Champion New York Mets. At last count, Rosie had pitched 178 no-hitters, 71 perfect games and a one-hitter against the Breakettes, the national amateur women's softball champions. "If Rosie were a man," Beaird contends, "she'd be an immortal."

Offering $5 to anyone who can hit one of her pitches before she strikes him out, Rosie fires the ball at more than 100 miles an hour, a speed seldom matched even in the major leagues. In addition to the express, though, Rosie boasts a repertoire of 15 different pitches. Like an experienced tennis player, she throws considerable "junk" — curves, drops, rises and breaks — to thoroughly confuse the hitters. "Most people don't realize it," says Rosie, "but a softball breaks more ways than a baseball."

Maids' top slugger Debby Bevers

Equally remarkable as Rosie's pitching skill is her endurance. Averaging 10 games a week in season (whereas a major league pitcher normally starts twice), she has no difficulties with her arm. Even early in the year, she can pitch both ends of a day-night doubleheader.

"Rosie has always been athletic," explained Beaird. "She was very good in basketball, and when she was 10 years old she could do jump shots, right and left lay-ins, hook shots, and she was a master at long set shots." As a girl, Rosie also excelled in track and pursued her father's first love, Ping Pong.

"You'll laugh," said Beaird, who once pitched semi-pro himself, "but I learned a lot about the science of pitching from playing Ping Pong. By using the paddle on the ball, I found that I could make the ball do tricks. I could make it curve to the right, to the left, I could make it go fast or slow, and I could make it float, rise, drop or slice. Once I understood the theory, I applied the same principles to pitching. I just let my fingers represent the traction of the paddle on the ball."

With Rosie's talent, coupled with Beaird's expertise, it wasn't long before the girl had learned to pitch so well that she could no longer seriously compete with others her own age. Barred from a Rolling Hills park league, Rosie, at 10, pitched semi-pro. Even there, however, her pitches proved too deceptive, and, to prevent a revolt within the league, Rosie left the team.

"Actually," Beaird remarked, "it was a series of negatives that turned into a fantastic positive. When no established league would allow Rosie to compete, Beaird founded the Rolling Hills Kids Klub, challenging local Little League and women's softball teams. Then, following a match for the city championship in 1964, Beaird heard a fan comment that, given a catcher, Rosie could have won the game alone.

This thought fascinated Beaird. At that time, there was a four-man team on tour called the "King and His Court," and, as Beaird explained, "we thought he needed a counterpart." Beaird selected two members of the Kids Klub to complement Rosie and her sister, catcher Eileen Beaird, and, with them, defeated local baseball and softball champions by lopsided scores. As word spread of their accomplishments, challenges began to pour in from all over the United States and Canada. Beaird quit his job as a construction contractor, and in 1965 took the Maids across North America on an 18,000-mile tour.

To keep the matches interesting to the audience and to tighten scores, Rosie began to pitch with handicaps. Through long hours of practice, she learned to pitch blindfolded, on her knees, between her legs and from second base. Taking signals flashed from Beaird, she might throw any of 16 different pitches, from one of a multitude of deliveries.

Entertainment, Beaird sincerely feels, is as important to his show as Rosie's pitching, and, for this reason, he introduced the comic vamp, "Lotta Chatter," revealed only after the game as Rosie's husband, Darrell Black. "A lot of people wondered what would happen to the team when I got married," said Rosie. "They thought I'd have to quit, but not only didn't we lose a pitcher, we gained a shortstop."

"Rosie and playing softball are the two

Having studied for the ministry, Beaird believes his work reflects a plan God has for every person's life. "He has a kind of design and pattern of things. He wants you to do and places. He wants you to go and impressions He wants you to leave," asserted Beaird. "Now our mission happens to be in sports, so while we don't get out on the diamond and preach, we hope our lives reflect God's plan."

In selecting players for his team, then Beaird requires more than athletic potential. "We look for femininity, beauty, charm, intelligence, and the ability to show off," he remarked. "It's really a combination of a showman, one who has a rapport with an audience and athletic skill," he added.

The Maids have come to think as one was chosen for the Maids over 100 other girls four years ago at a tryout camp. Coming to the team "in extremely bad throwing form," Debby has become a fixture at first base and, hitting cleanup, is the Maids' top slugger. Called "Big Stick" by her teammates, the 5-foot-10 beauty can hit a softball some 250 feet. "You don't need big muscles to hit the ball hard," she said, "It's mostly follow through with the wrists."

A seasoned veteran behind the plate, Rosie's catcher, Eileen Beaird, has remained at her post since the Kids Klub days. The team's most consistent hitter, she boasts a .600 batting average, and her clutch singles inspire the offense in crucial situations. Eileen is the coolest of the Maids under pressure, and her composure enables her to gun down runners bold enough to try to steal a base.

Under Beaird's guidance, the Maids have come to think as one. At practice, he drives them relentlessly toward perfection. "Where ya gonna play?" he yells constantly. "Where does the throw go?" The girls know every play from every angle. With but four players, they have to.

"Every fielder has specific responsibilities on every play," Beaird explained. "Our pitcher most commonly covers first and third, so that if a ball is hit to the first baseman, she throws to Rosie like you'd lead a football player going out for a pass." If a runner tries to steal third, Eileen fires to the empty bag, and Lotta must race both to meet the sizzling throw and beat the sliding runner. When a pitch is hit to the wall, the short stop dashes to retrieve it, and, with a good throw, can hold the runner to a triple. "We used to have runners try to stretch it to a homer," said Beaird, "but they were most likely tagged out at the plate trying."

As well as hitting and fielding fundamentals, Beaird seeks to instill in his players a positive mental attitude. "Use the power of positive thinking," he tells them. "Believe 100 per cent that the pitcher couldn't possibly throw the ball past you."

Basically, then, the same "ya gotta believe" philosophy that took last year's New York Mets to the World Series, combined with keen fundamental knowledge and raw talent, enables these young ladies to defeat determined, championship opposition. "Every year, the hardest thing for us to take is our first loss," said Beaird. "I feel sorry for the opponents the next time we play."

When the team does lose, its members often fall victim as much to their self-imposed handicaps as to the other team. "Since we only use four players," Beaird remarked "a lot of balls that go for hits against us would normally be outs. It's like a track runner carrying a 20-pound weight and still trying to win the race."

In addition, Beaird figures that about 8 per cent of his team's losses are strictly due to prejudiced officiating. "Some umpires are as outstanding in their job as Rosie is in hers," he commented, "but once in a while we get one who's just outright, downright, 100 per cent crooked. About eight years ago, in Indianapolis, we had an umpire who called every single pitch that Rosie threw a ball unless the batter swung at it. I asked him to try to be at least somewhat fair, but he wouldn't so we picked up our bats and left right in the middle of the game."

Having played in so many different places, from soccer fields and gymnasiums to the Houston Astrodome, the Maids have found no two crowds alike. "There are all kinds of different people; you have to learn to accept that," Beaird explained. "We go over big in Wisconsin. People there drink a lot and come to the game half drunk. Even if we don't do anything, they just roar. You stomp your foot, and you'll have 'em rolling in the aisle."

Other audiences, however, sometimes show no reaction to the team. The first time they encountered this kind of group, Beaird thought the Maids had failed, but, afterwards, the same people who during the game had not even smiled, raved about the show.

More often, as they travel across America, the Maids find themselves the talk of the town. Beaird recalls a game several years ago in a small farming community of 1,000 in rural New York State. "Our local sponsor ran an excellent promotion," he said, "and over 6,000 turned out for the game. We had 'em standing in the outfield."

Another time, a driving rain covered the field with six inches of water. Undaunted, a thousand enraptured fans sat under umbrellas in the stands and, barefooted, the Maids went through with the game.

In the early years, the Maids had a short stop who could rifle the ball overhand harder than anyone else her age Beaird had ever seen. When a Pennsylvania crowd got on his team for defeating the city baseball champions in the "sissy" game of softball, Beaird challenged them at their own game. "We moved Rosie to the infield," said Beaird, about to play his trump card, "and brought the short stop in to pitch. She tied the other guys up in knots."

For many years, then, the Maids would play either baseball or softball, whichever their challengers preferred. Four years ago, though, the short stop left the team, and the Maids reverted solely to softball. Since then, says Beaird, fans have looked forward to a confrontation between the Queen and Her Maids and their predecessors, the King and His Court, now playing in their 30th consecutive season. To this day, however, that confrontation has yet to come.

"We've asked them to play us," said Beaird, "and we've appeared together at doubleheaders, but I guess they'd have everything to lose in a game with us. Their pitcher, Eddie Feigner, is kind of getting on, and he could no longer beat us. Rosie is a better pitcher."

Rare indeed is the man capable of outpitching the daughter of Royal Beaird. "We ease off in almost every game," he remarked. "We play to win, and when we lose we don't intend to, but to make it interesting we take chances we really shouldn't. We never want to embarrass an opponent."

Always striving primarily to impress the crowds with their good character, the girls remain, at Beaird's insistence, "the ultimate in femininity." Like true champions, they never seek to humiliate an opponent, but to please their audience. Tempering their superior playing skills with modesty, poise and grace, they seldom, if ever, embarrass anyone — least of all, themselves. □

The amazing Rosie Black pitches blindfolded, between her legs and fires the ball at more than 100 miles an hour the conventional way. She offers $5 to anyone who can hit one of her pitches before she strikes him out.

Melina Mercouri

The angry Greek

By REX REED

Melina Mercouri was in the news again, and the news was bad. In the middle of a busy shooting schedule for two movies being made in America — the big-budget film Paramount is making of Jacqueline Susann's best-seller Once Is Not Enough and a low-budget political film Mercouri's husband Jules Dassin is making about the bloody student uprising in Athens last November called The Rehearsal — Melina took time out to speak to a reporter from the Associated Press.

She said a lot of emotional things during the interview because everything Melina does is emotional. She talked about her career, her marriage and how it feels to be a homeless exile after seven years of campaigning against the Fascist dictatorship that has overtaken her homeland in the form of a military junta.

Then all hell broke loose. The article appeared with everything she said edited out except the words "I hate Americans, I hate America and I've become totally anti-American." One hour of carefully qualified discussion had been reduced to five paragraphs of sensationalism.

As the story began appearing in newspapers throughout the country, under headlines like Melina Hits Out At U.S. and Melina Hates America!, her phones began to ring. Time and Newsweek were calling for quotes. Paramount executives were demanding explanations from Hollywood. There were rumors that she might be fired from Once Is Not Enough. Then, one by one, Melina's friends (who are legion) began to come to her defense.

Rex Reed is a syndicated entertainment writer.

Jacqueline Susann said "We didn't hire her for her politics, we hired her because she's one of the greatest actresses in the world. She hates the American foreign policy that supports the Greek colonels and she hates the American government officials who turn their backs on the atrocities being committed in Greece, and she's absolutely right. But she doesn't hate Americans. She hates American stupidity. Most Americans don't even know what the junta is."

Arthur Miller said, "Half the world is anti-American already, what difference does it make?" Alexis Smith, one of her co-stars in Once Is Not Enough, said, "We love Melina and we're with her all the way. We've all been misquoted before and we understand."

George Hamilton and David Janssen demonstrated support in stronger ways. Hamilton sent her a bottle of Dom Perignon and took her to the Tony Awards telecast in his wife's place. Janssen suggested the whole thing could be cleared up if Melina would just substitute the word "Republicans" for the word "Americans," then "85 per cent of the American population would stand up and cheer."

Meanwhile, the object of the hullabaloo was inconsolable with grief. It was raining blue sewage outside, but in the converted warehouse where she was filming The Rehearsal on W. 19th Street near the Hudson River docks, it was raining in Melina Mercouri's heart.

On the ground floor, a TV crew was filming a toilet paper commercial. On the third floor, the entrance to the sound stage where she sat weeping was guarded by an enormous sign in English and Greek: Quiet Please — If We Want The Junta To Fall, We Must All Work Together!

The place was cluttered with delicatessen rolls, coffee cups and cigarette butts. Mikis Theodorakis, the Greek composer who spent years being tortured in a Greek prison for his democratic attacks on the junta, and almost died of tuberculosis there, was conducting a choir in a song of freedom while Lillian Hellman read a letter on camera written by a Greek student. The letter was written during last November's massacre in Athens. It was full of hope, but it was never finished and never mailed, and its author has never been heard from or seen since.

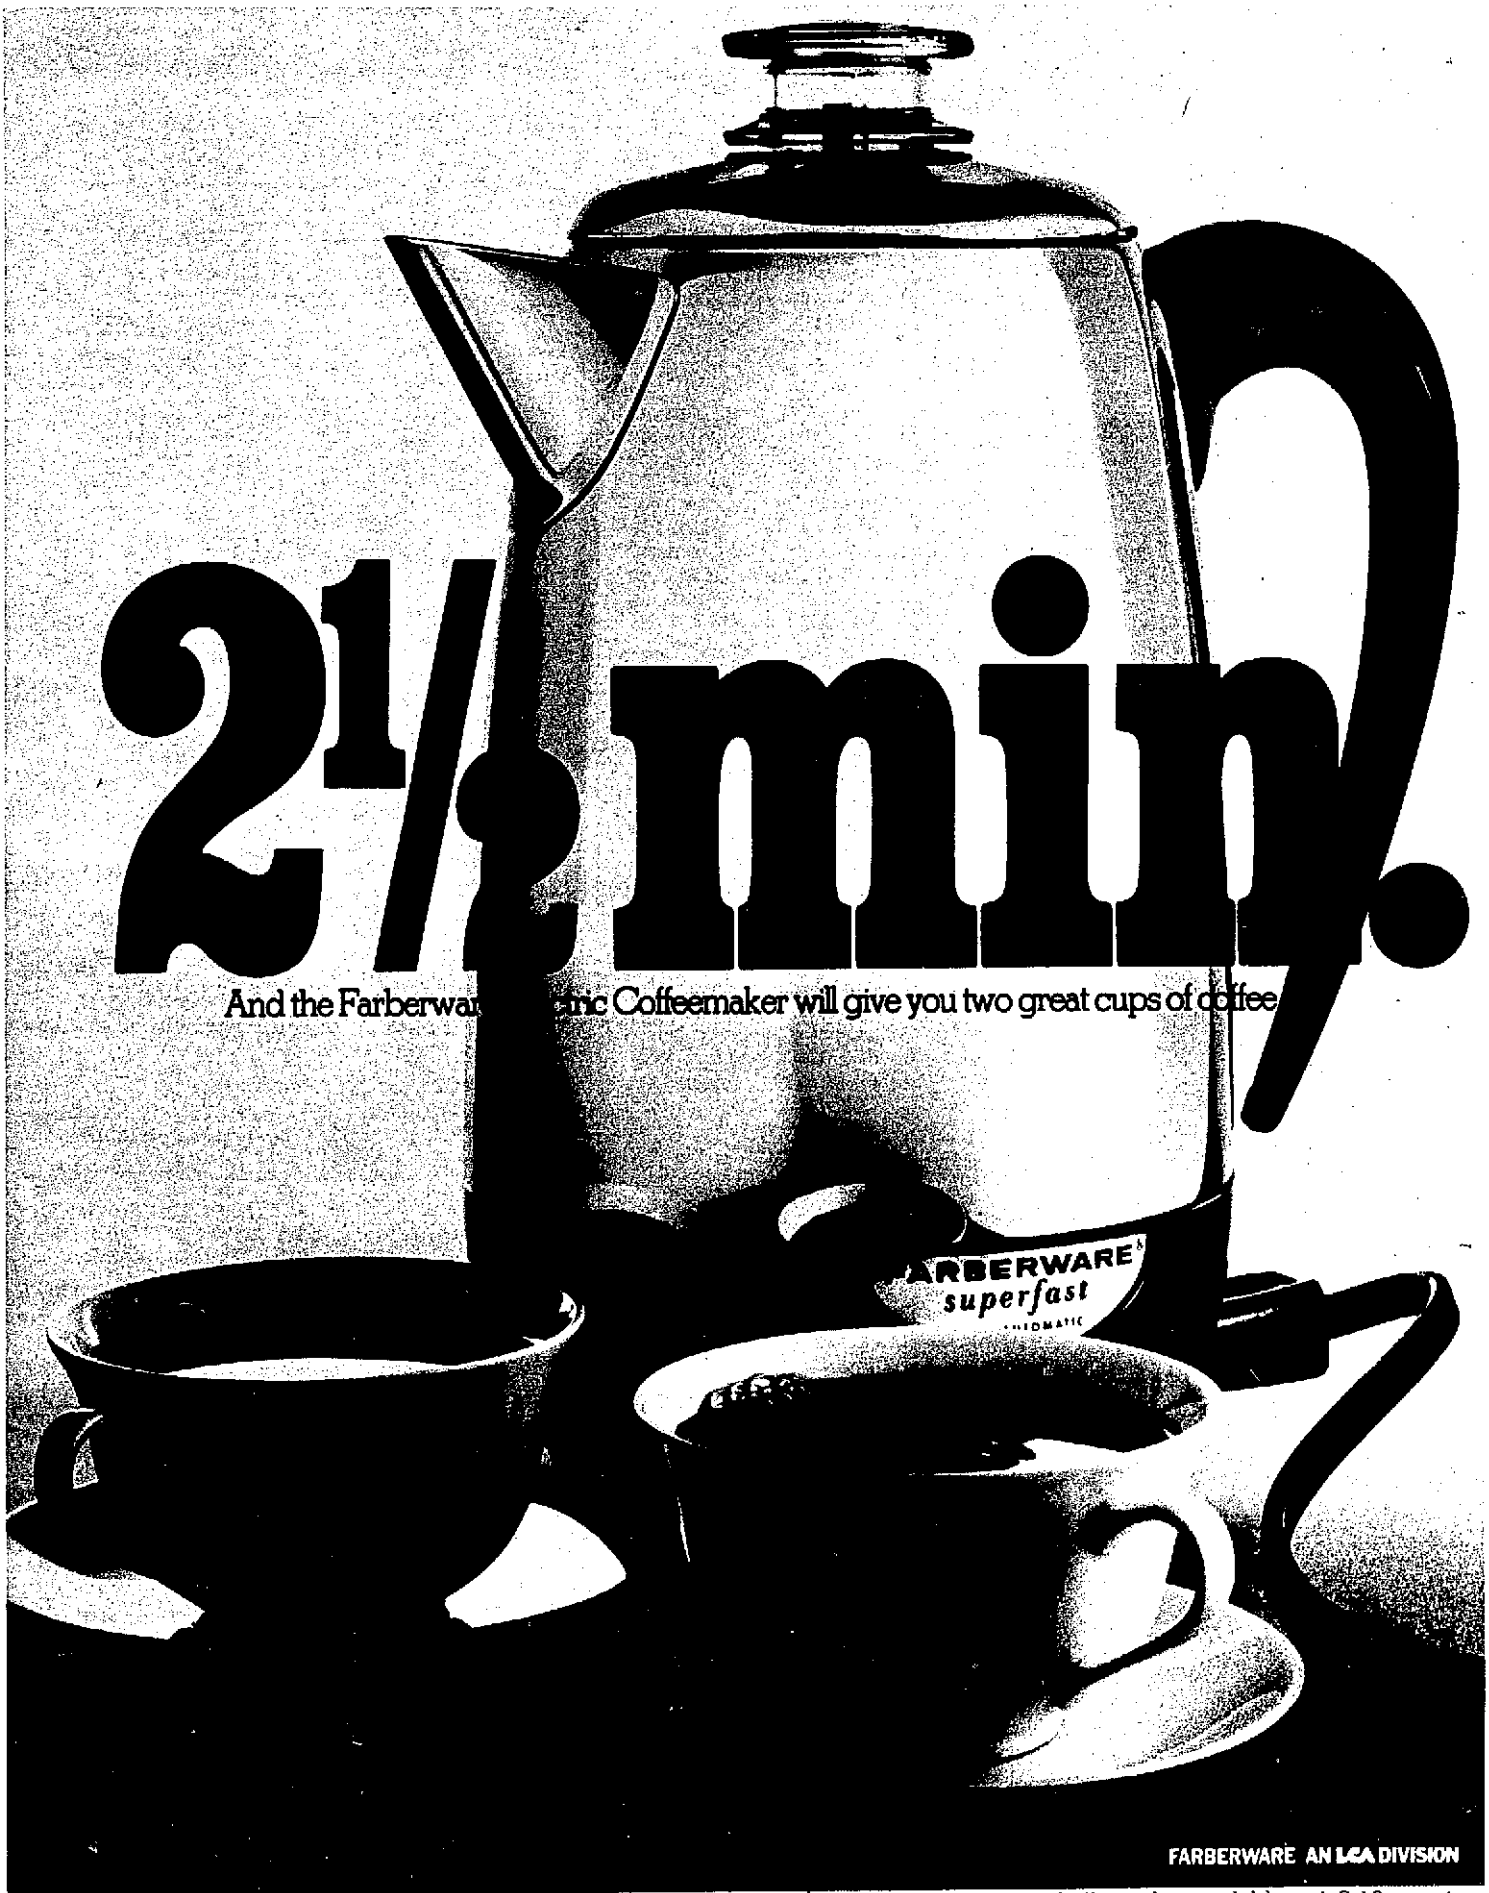

Melina motioned for me to be quiet as Lillian Hellman read, her voice full of intelligence and strength: "I am writing from the only free territory in Greece ... I have never been so happy in my life ... I can hear you say 'Oh those Greek exaggerations' but yesterday the people kept coming, all through the night, until dawn, to the school ... a big delegation of construction workers has just entered the school. They're shouting 'The people are united, Fascism will fall' ... there's so much emotion, so much happiness, some of the kids are crying ... politicians, painters, writers and actors are carrying banners and singing ... nobody is afraid anymore."

Electricians, grips, carpenters — everyone cried listening to Lillian Hellman. They knew what most Americans do not know. They knew what happened next. Melina drew me aside. "Listen to me, Rex. Four hundred students, workers and 12-year-old children were massacred that night by American tanks. All of the Greek soldiers who marched on the people were trained by Americans.

"There are American warships in the port of Athens and American sailors in the streets who support the dictatorship, and it has caused an anti-Americanism in Greece because they will not go away. So I have been forced to become anti-American, too, but only in the sense that I am against the hypocrisy of the American government, not the American people. The people and their government are two different things, and it's important to distinguish between the two.

Mercouri

"After the massacre and bloodshed of the November 1973 murders, it was revealed that explosive bullets were fired into the arms and legs of innocent children, blowing their limbs away. Those were American bullets. And yet the Pentagon says nothing. Things were getting better under Papadopoulos. He promised free elections and dissenters were allowed to speak out in the press without fear of imprisonment or censorship. Then the new dictatorship took over. The concentration camps have now been re-opened. The prisons are full. The news is censored. The students and the liberals are in jail. It is just like the Nazi occupation, but the American government watches it happen and says nothing.

"Androutsopoulos, the new prime minister, was a CIA agent in Chicago. He was in the Pentagon two months before the second dictatorship took power. Ioannides, head of the military police, was a main torturer of women and children under Papadopoulos. Both of these men are supported by the Pentagon. And yet the American people do not know this. In everything I say and do, I am trying to wake up the Americans I love because my heart is breaking.

"Now there is this article which makes me sound like an angry, stupid girl. I adore Americans, I am married to an American, most of my best friends are Americans. Dassin loves his citizenship; he has never changed his passport; it would be ridiculous for me to put words in his mouth. I am proud to be married to an American. I love Americans too much to put the responsibilities for the evils of their government on their shoulders. There are many people who are exiles in their own countries because they have no power to change the Establishment.

"This whole film we are making is a miracle. Nobody gets paid anything. There are Greeks, Jews, American students — they all are contributing their time and talent because they want to educate people to the truth in words and music about the injustice that is being perpetuated in the names of innocent American people. So why would I say I hate Americans when we are working side by side?"

In addition to Lillian Hellman, Arthur Miller will appear in the film reading from the files when Greece was expelled from the Council of Europe after the atrocities were revealed. Included in his performance is the personal account of a pregnant girl who lost her baby after being badly beaten while American sailors watched with apathy. Laurence Olivier is performing a poem by a Nobel Prize Greek poet who died for his beliefs. Maxmilian Schell is in it, too, and the list of famous stars who have phoned Melina and begged to contribute their services free of charge is long and inspirational.

The day I visited the set, even I appeared on camera. The film was finished and edited in three weeks in order to premiere at the Cannes Film Festival. It's a brave, courageous, dangerous and unpopular thing to do in a country that is being accused, but Dassin and Mercouri have always been closely associated with valor in the line of fire. What they and all the talents helping them are doing is good and right.

If The Rehearsal achieves its desired effect, Melina hopes the U.S. government will be forced by an angry outcry from American citizens to withdraw military support from the current dictatorship. "If Henry Kissinger does what is right," she says, "he will not allow those criminals to stay in Greece for five more minutes. So you see, I hate the Pentagon and I hate the American foreign policy, but I don't hate Americans.

"Watergate was a Democratic awakening in the American life and it symbolizes hope in the continuation of leadership and Democratic ideals. So it is good for the rest of the world. But America has been betrayed by the military and by the corrupt people Americans have elected in Washington. But they are waking up now and things will change. Everything George McGovern predicted has come true.

"Arthur Miller, Lillian Hellman, the taxi drivers who kiss me in the streets, the men who come out of open manholes and yell 'Give 'em hell, Melina!' — I don't hate them and they know it. Yesterday I was on the streets of New York and many simple people came up to me and said 'Melina, trust us and tell what to do for Greece!' They didn't feel I had anti-American feelings for them.

"I am thrilled to be working in this film and in Jacqueline Susann's film at Paramount. I am thrilled to be living in a free country. That's why the Associated Press article was so unfair. I don't want to say the reporter was a liar. Perhaps he didn't understand my English. But he harmed me and wounded me deeply by taking my quotes out of context and misinterpreting them. He cut out all of the pain and explanation and left only the poison.

"There is enough dishonesty around already. My greatest sympathy is for the American people because they are the most brainwashed, the most guilt-ridden people in the world. But they are also the best and the fairest when they know the truth. And that is why I would never do anything to hurt them. I could never hate the people who have given me so much help and so much love."

Fanciful footwork

By DICK EMERY

"No need to blush if caught walking.
Walking is an honorable estate.
Walk free."
—Walt Whitman 1819-1892

Walking saves gasoline. It's good for the feet. It clears the mind. It spruces up the legs, the pelvis and other areas of anatomy in ways which have been studied by deep thinkers (Socrates, 469-309 BC; Leonardo da Vinci, 52-1519) and lesser minds, as here.

Whole textbooks have outpoured from experts on the feet, with which Man and Woman contact the earth when gasoline fails.

That leaves shoes. In walking, shoes do play a part, unless the walker is barefoot.

"Put off thy shoes
from off they feet."
—Exodus 3:5

Here, we have some ideas about shoes from a shoe merchant. He owns a shop in San Pedro. For reasons which should become obvious, he asked to be anonymous in this masterpiece.

"People are funny about their feet," he apologized.

I suppose he meant women.

"Her shoes were Number Nine."
—Clementine.

But he said men, too. Different from how women are funny about feet and shoes and things like that. In the business, he knows.

Walking, as a subject, does stumble over Women's Lib. Take "shank's mare." That was the name for walking, long before automobiles.

Shank, as everyone knows, is that part of the leg between knee and ankle. But how about "mare?" Why not "shank's horse" which leans toward the male? Search history and where can you find one woman famed as a walker?

Two of history's greatest walkers lived in California. Junipero Serra, the Spanish Franciscan missionary (1713-84), preferred shank's mare to riding a mule. He outpaced mule-trains on the 1,200-mile march from Monterey to the tip of Baja.

John Muir (1838-1914), the Scot-born American naturalist, walked California's Sierras and many a high mile in Alaska, Russia, India and Australia. At 78 he wrote his next-to-the-last-book, A Thousand Mile Walk to the Gulf.

"Boots — boots — boots — boots."
— Rudyard Kipling 1865-1936

At 3 mph, a brisk pace walking, you burn 1.5 extra calories per hour per pound of you, over sitting still. So say the walk-and-get-thin pamphleteers. If you don't raid the refrigerator when you get home. Such walking uses the feet. And one thing's sure, about feet.

Mistreat 'em — and they'll let you know.

Shoes enter the big picture there. They do, that is, if you believe the shoe merchant. He HAS to believe it. It's his life.

"For walking, wear shoes that fit." He said it, breaking bad news gently. "People are funny about their shoes," he explained.

Every time you step, down goes your weight on four arches, 26 bones, 19 muscles, 10 ligaments, 26 joints and more nerves than anyone ever counted all of — just in that one foot you're stepping on.

That foot has its arteries, too, and its veins, in a red-and-blue network down to microscopic that looks like a street map of Los Angeles County.

All that intricate anatomy down there is hitched to the upstairs work.

One sore toe makes you hurt all over.

Stub that toe in Long Beach and the throb jars the earthquake meter in Pasadena.

"He is not poor who has enough of things to use. If it is well with your belly, chest and feet, the wealth of kings can give you nothing more."
— Epistles Book 1

Four arches in one foot? Yes. Two lengthwise and two sidewise, shock absorbers. Eight arches for a pair of feet. Arches can fall. Joints — there is a list longer than a Chinese laundry's list of prices, just for troubles you can have with joints in one foot.

Every tiny little working part of each foot has a happy, secret life of its own, and it can go on that way year after year and then start whooping like the Indians at Custer's Last Stand.

"Misfit shoes can do it," the shoeman said, looking around at the rows of shoe boxes.

"I move with leaden feet."
— Wm. Dean Howells 1837-1920

"More customers are asking for walking shoes. They don't want bunions and blisters. This is the first time, really, that people are thinking less of the eyes and more of the feet."

He meant, he said, that more walking has made people aware of shoes that fit, as opposed to shoes to be looked at.

"People are funny about their feet," he said. "Where feet are concerned, vanity and sentiment collide with common sense. It is the people who compromise; their feet do not.

"The feet never forget or forgive a mean trick. You may think they have forgotten how you jammed them into misfit shoes, but they haven't forgotten. When the time comes, they'll make you pay!"

Because people are funny about their feet and suspicious of criticism about their choice of footwear, and because women's shoe styles are forever changing, confusion exists over sizes and shapes of shoes.

"Most women tell me they have a foot really hard to fit. One size forward, a different size aft, so to speak. Triple this, quadruple that. They have a very expensive foot, they tell me, and they are proud of it.

"Of course, I agree with them. I am not in this business to drive good customers away.

"The truth is, the average foot is what the average woman has. Put a bare foot on the floor. Draw a line around it. You'll see, the foot is narrower through the heel than through the ball of the foot.

"Feet are made that way. So are shoes. Feet come in all sizes and shapes. So do shoes. We stock shoes to fit expensive feet. Indeed we do!"

"You cannot teach a crab to walk straight."
— Aristophanes 450-395 BC

For comfortable walking the shoeman spoke up for an Oxford type — "that means laces" — shoe with thick sole, only slightly raised heel and toe-room. Let the walker beware, he said, of the elegant buckle-type boot which waltzes with the wearer's heel.

"Blisters. But you can't tell some people. We have Texans who never rode a horse, who come in here and buy only horse-type, high-heeled, cramp-toed riding boots which are a status symbol meaning the man owns a horse to do the walking, which my man doesn't."

The horseless people, in their way, were only following the Chinese of pre-revolution centuries, who hobbled their fanciest wives to show they were useless for field work.

"The fashion for platform shoes, which we have now, probably goes back to some idea equally nutty. At least, platforms make good business for doctors and hospitals. Even going barefoot might be safer."

"Put off thy shoes
from off thy feet."
—Exodus 3:5

Distress from misfit shoes has wrung lament from mankind since pre-history. A walker's feet are the parts of him which most often connect him to his Mother Earth. Their twinges get his attention. He might avoid the pain by riding a horse, or a car, or two-wheeling it, or flying. But it's hard to beat a bad shoe afoot.

"Ay, there's the rub!"
—Wm. Shakespeare 1564-1616

The interview with the shoeman broke off as two women entered the shop. One was complaining that her husband was always buying shoes he couldn't wear.

The other woman laughed.

"Why don't you just paint his feet?"

Not Shakespearean, but not bad.

Later the shoe merchant told me that wives drop by to buy shoes for their husbands, bringing the husbands along.

"I sit here on the fitting stool and ask the husband if the shoe fits, and the wife says it's a bit tight across the toes.

"We try another pair and I ask him if he likes this shoe better and she says it's fine but he would like a different shade.

"We finally fit him with a pair she likes and away they go.

"We have husbands who drop by, later, and swap shoes for a different pair, just man-to-man and nothing said about wives.

"Husbands are buying the shoes to give as presents — birthday or something. Slippers, too, of course."

A foible among men, he said, is sentimental care of an old pair of shoes or boots.

"They'll have an old pair re-soled and mended over and over, and when the shoes are beyond use, keep them lying around forever. They just can't bear parting with shoes which have carried them through adventures they like to remember."

"Look at his boots."
—Geo. Bernard Shaw 1856-1950

Sizes of shoes run into a maze.

It's an old problem.

"Men and women both think they know what size they wear — and don't.

"Feet change. The arches may weaken. The foot may spread or get thinner or fatter. It makes a difference if people walk more, or stand more, or sit."

Sizes may vary from one manufacturer to another and from one country of manufacture to another — sizes carrying the same numbers.

"Scandanavians usually have big feet. Orientals have short, wide feet. The biggest are Polynesians.

"One of the men here remembers fitting shoes for Duke Kahanemoku, the Hawaiian swimmer and Olympic champ, when Duke was sheriff of Honolulu in the 1930s.

"Duke wore 14½ EEE. Of course, he was a giant of a man, who went barefoot a lot."

"It happened one day about noon, going towards my boat, I was exceedingly surprised with the print of a man's naked foot on the shore, which was very plain to be seen in the sand."
—Daniel Defoe 1661-1731

"Shoe sizes run by the numbers in three kinds — women's, men's and children's.

"Women's start with the smallest, 4½, up to 11 or 12 for the woman who stands six foot-plus. A model — a fashion model, and they are tall women — may wear 8½ to a 10.

"Men's run from 6½ up to 12 and if you need bigger, they would have to be ordered, in most shops.

"Children's sizes for boys are not complicated. After size 6 they go right into men's shoes at size 6½. For girls, children's size 3 is equal to a 5 or 5½ woman's shoe."

Widths go by the alphabet.

"Shoe widths vary a quarter-inch from one designation to the next.

"Men's or children's widths run Bs, Cs, Ds and Es and there are EE and EEE. B for a child is very, very narrow. C is narrow. D is average and E is getting into a very wide shoe.

"The D width in a children's shoe, which is average width, is equivalent to a B width in women's shoes, which is average.

"Now, in women's shoes, AAAA is narrowest, AAA is very narrow, AA narrow, A a little narrower than average, B is average, C, you're really getting wide, D, a wide shoe, and anything wider is probably not stocked in the store."

Clear? Like mud! He smiled and explained further:

"Variations between women's, men's and children's sizes cause all the confusion."

"My feet are cold."
—Robert Graves 1895-

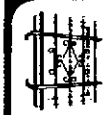

"Years ago all three kinds were made on the same last. One size, by the number, was the same actual size — women's, men's and children's shoes.

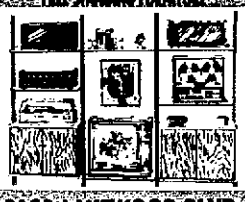

"But when women's shoes changed styles from year to year — fashions, you see — manufacturers had to change machinery each time. That cost a lot of money.

"To save money, they began to change only the machinery for making women's shoes. Men's and children's shoe lasts don't change.

"Ever since the change, shoe sizes have been confusing."

One of the many ways in which people are funny about their feet — as the shoeman sees it — is that people who go to all kinds of pains to hitch safety-belts in their cars will happily stick their feet into footwear which almost certainly will cause an ailment or a calamity.

"Feet are not alike. Some people have a wider space between big toe and its neighbor; they wear thongs and get along fine.

"The next person limps along in thongs and gets foot troubles not only painful but very expensive to get rid of.

"Clogs are dangerous. They break ankles.

"Thin-soled moccasins let nails through.

"Huaraches let in the dirt.

"High heels — well, people are funny about their feet, and the fashion parade goes on forever. Women blame everything else for backaches. Wearing high heels shortens the heel tendon. Then wearing flats pulls the tendon down. The strain hits the back. Bingo!"

"It is better to die on your feet than to live on your knees."
—Emiliano Zapata 1877-1919

One of the ways in which people are funny about their feet worries the shoe merchant. It gets into questions of ethics, even questions of legal liabilities.

"In this business we have an old triangle," he said.

"We sit on the fitting stool and sometimes notice a condition in a child's foot — something about bone structure, say — which should be looked at by an orthopedic surgeon.

"Here is the parent, smiling.

"Here is the child.

"Then, outside somewhere, are the doctors — general practitioners, child specialists and orthopedic surgeons, jealous of each other and certainly not welcoming any meddling by a mere shoe clerk.

"They brought Daniel, and cast him into the den of lions."
—Ezekiel 6:16

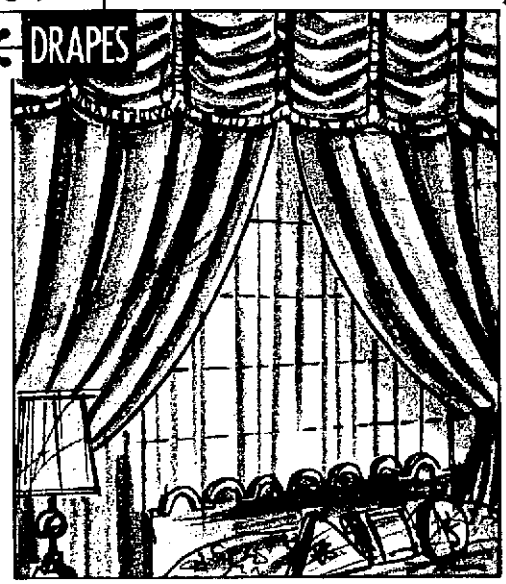

"We see the child's foot and we look at the parent. Tact is the word. Here we are, being conscientious, knowing that passing the buck won't protect the child.

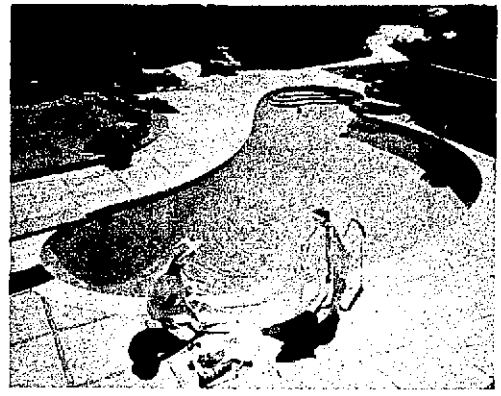

"People are funny about their feet, especially their children's feet. Has the parent taken this child to a doctor — recently? Would a routine checkup expose this possible beginning of a crippling bone problem which the shoeman believes he sees?

"It takes a brave shoeman to speak up. The safest thing for him to do is to keep his mouth shut. Yet, a good shoeman knows he may be the first person to notice a developing problem in a child's foot."

"Can two walk together, except they be agreed?!!

'Before the meal' Italian style

By VIRGINIA HEFFINGTON

Antipasti is Italian for "before the meal", meaning hors d'oeuvre or a first course.

Antipasti are better geared to a restaurant routine than a home meal unless the party is large.

Good meaty choices for the antipasto (ahn-tee-pahs-toh) tray are some of the fine Italian pork products such as prosciutto, mortadella, pepperoni or other dried sausages. Salami is a happy choice.

Marinated vegetables are good complements. Buy marinated artichokes and mushrooms. Use their marinades along with your favorite Italian dressing (the kind you make yourself or one from a bottle) to flavor canned, drained baby carrots and garbanzos. To the marinade, add crisp-cooked asparagus spears, raw or partially cooked cauliflowerets and raw sliced celery and cucumbers. Include olives of all kinds — ripe, pimiento-stuffed green and plain green.

Other likely choices for your antipasto platter are chunks of canned tuna, anchovy fillets, radishes and hard-cooked eggs. Canned drained pimientos or roasted red peppers add a rosy hue as do piquant sweet or hot cherry peppers.

And don't forget the cheese — Provolone is the perfect choice.

As for the dressing, use the bottled kind or this easy recipe.

ITALIAN DRESSING

1 cup olive or other salad oil
¼ cup red wine vinegar
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon coarse-ground pepper
¼ teaspoon cayenne pepper
¼ teaspoon dry mustard
2 cloves garlic, minced

Combine ingredients in jar with tight-fitting lid. Cover jar and shake to blend.

Arrange your choice of cooked or canned drained vegetables in shallow container. Pour dressing over all. Cover with see-through plastic film and refrigerate. Drain before arranging on tray with other antipasto tidbits like cheese and salami.

Kikkoman Teriyaki-handle with flair!

There's zesty good-eating when Kikkoman Teriyaki comes to dinner. It adds the creative touch to recipes – gives most any food you serve an intriguing, special flavor.

Pour it directly from the bottle as a seasoning. Use as a marinade and baste in barbecuing steaks, chicken and hamburgers. Serve as a table sauce for meat and seafood. It's tangy, different, superbly flavorful!

The tang of Kikkoman Teriyaki didn't happen overnight. Behind that zesty flavor lies many years of experience. But its big difference can be traced to the very special ingredients. It's made with incomparable Kikkoman Soy Sauce, then blended with choice herbs, spices and fine wine.

Look for Kikkoman Teriyaki. It will give your dinner flair!

Quick Teriyaki: Combine ½ cup Kikkoman Teriyaki Sauce*, ½ cup water & 4 tsp. cornstarch in pan. Cook over low heat until sauce thickens; stir constantly. Spoon over cooked steaks, chicken, fish or hamburgers.

Basic Sweet-Sour Sauce: Drain 1 can (13¼ oz.) pineapple chunks; reserve all syrup. Mix syrup with 1 can (8 oz.) stewed tomatoes; ½ cup Kikkoman Teriyaki*; 1 onion, chunked; 2 Tbsp. cider vinegar & 1 Tbsp. brown sugar in saucepan. Cover; simmer 3 min., or until onion is tender-crisp. Blend 4 tsp. cornstarch & 2 Tbsp. water; add to sauce & bring to boil, stirring constantly. Remove from heat; add pineapple. Serve over cooked chicken, fish or pork. Makes 3 cups.

Teriyaki sauces vary greatly in taste and quality—do not substitute.*

Apri-Teri Chicken

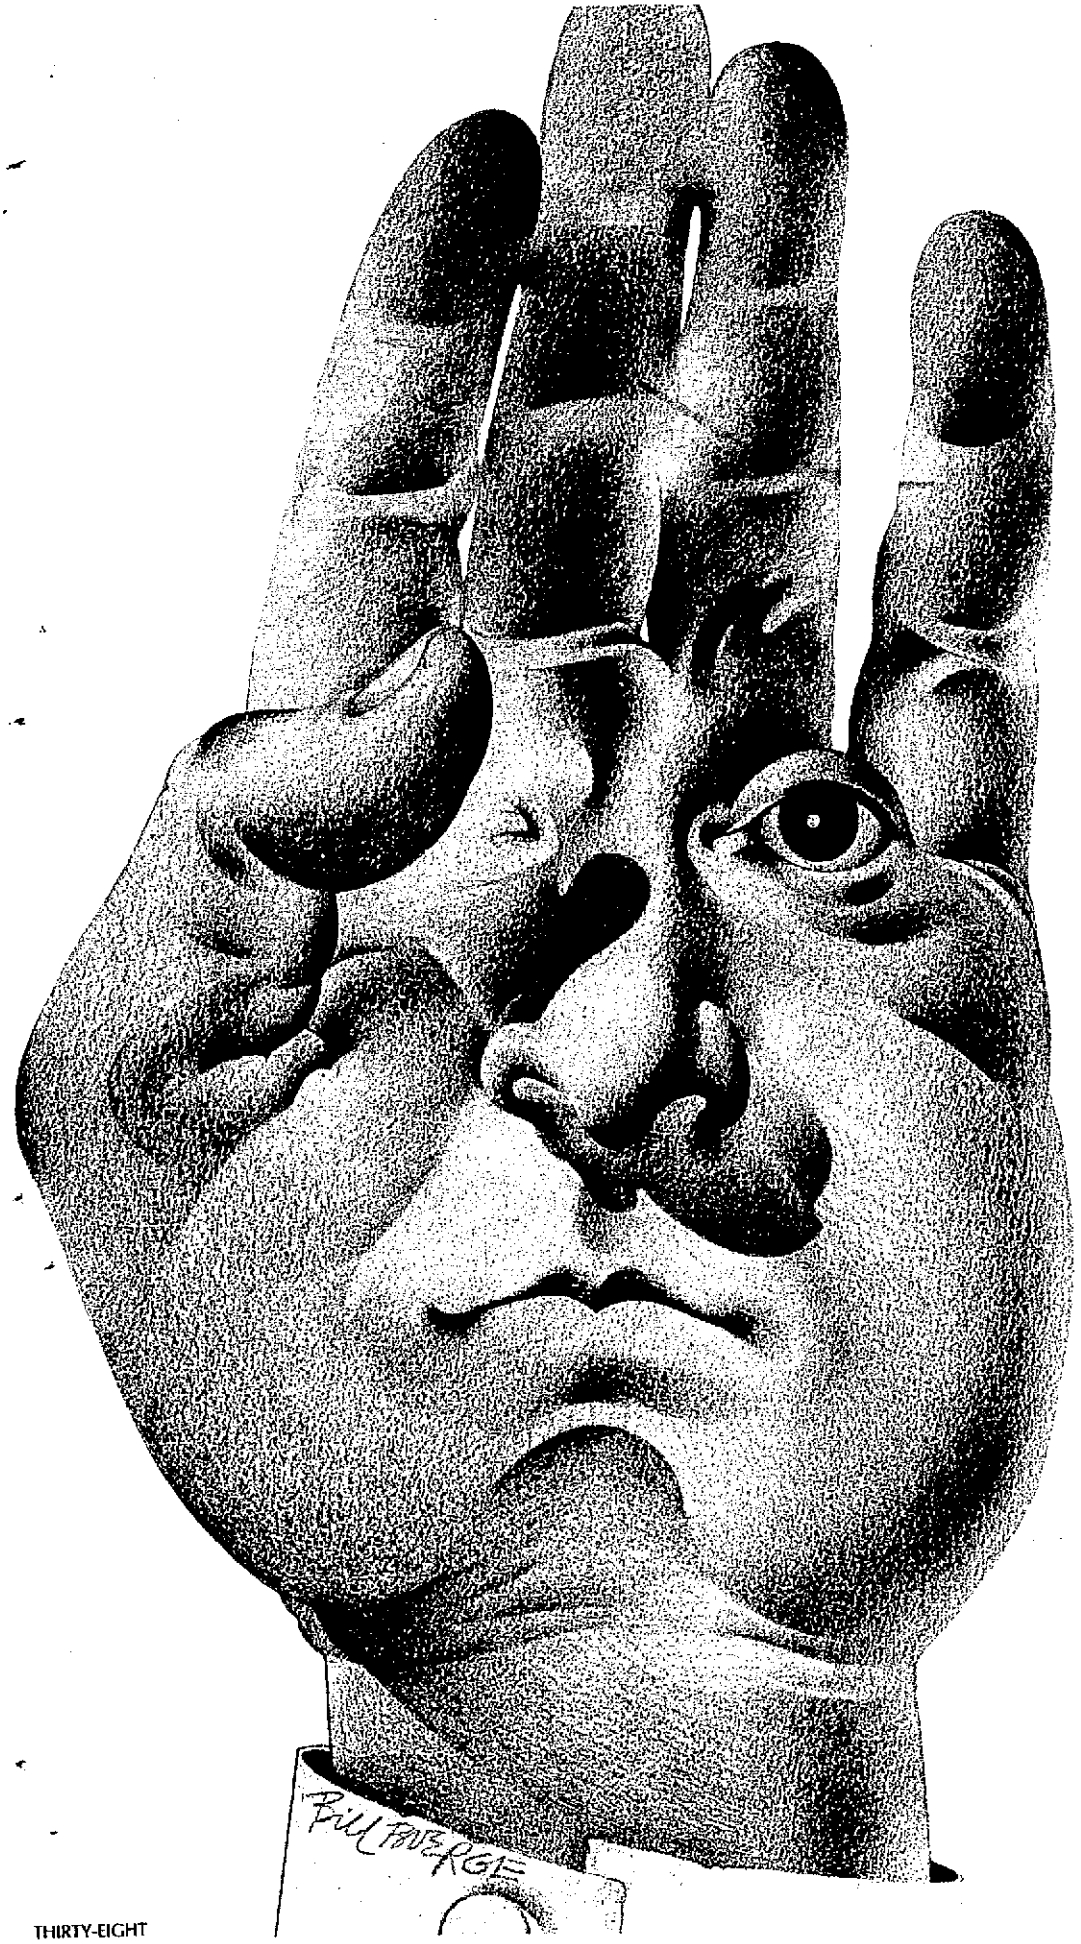

1 broiler-fryer chicken, cut up
¼ cup flour (about)
2 tablespoons salad oil
½ cup Kikkoman Teriyaki Sauce*
2 tablespoons apricot preserves
1 tablespoon instant minced onion
1 tablespoon lemon juice

Coat chicken with flour; brown slowly in hot oil. Combine remaining ingredients; pour evenly over chicken. Cover, reduce heat and simmer 45 minutes, or until chicken is tender; turn over once. Makes 4 servings.

Teriyaki sauces vary greatly in taste and quality—do not substitute.*

Kikkoman glorifies flavor!

The left-handed minority

By STAN LEPPARD

"Most left-handed people write with their hand and arm sort of scrooched around upside down," said my favorite lefthander. "But I don't." (stated with a certain amount of smugness) "Watch."

Stan Leppard is an I,P-T reporter.

I watched while she demonstrated, and she was right. Her hand and arm weren't scrooched around upside down at all. She had the paper scrooched around upside down.

That's the sort of rationalization the world has come to expect from its left-handed people, the sinister minority.

The adjective is not intended as a gratuitous knock at lefthanders; the word "sinister" is Latin for left, and lefties are known to the scientific world as sinistrals. Even semantics weigh in the sacks on southpaws, the oldest — and in some ways the most discriminated against — minority group in history. Our word "dextrous," or skillful, comes from the Greek "dexios," meaning anything on the right, and the Latin "decere," or "to be fitting." The French word for left is "gauche," or clumsy. In our own terminology, a "left-handed compliment" is one delivered in a backwards, or sneaky manner, and anything coming "out of left field" is a freak of fortune, usually ill. Awkward people have "two left feet," never two right feet.

Most lefthanders learn to bear up under these semantic slurs, but find it harder to cope with the way the world is arrayed against them on a more practical level. From the Bronze Age, weapons and tools have been fashioned to favor the right hand, as are modern-day appliances. Ordinary scissors won't cut for sinistrals, television controls are on the right side. Lefthanders frequently half-drown themselves and anyone else in the immediate vicinity when they try to turn off a water faucet. Screws tighten the wrong way, and watches wind the wrong way.

My lefthander was inclined to pooh-pooh the disadvantages inherent in the last two examples.

"I never have any trouble with screwdrivers or winding watches," she asserted loftily.

This, of course, is because she wouldn't know what to do with a screwdriver, or how it works, with either hand, and she never wound a watch in her life. She has a drawer half full of watches, dropped there one by one as they ran down for the first time. However, I tactfully refrained from pointing this out.

Neither did I point out that an author a few years back found 80 complimentary references in the Bible to the right hand (with such praises echoed in the Koran and the Torah) and 20 derogatory allusions to the left hand; or that the Devil, being sinister, is always depicted as left-handed.

Despite my lefty's Pollyanna-ish attitude about some of the disadvantages of southpawism ("I like always being sure of getting an end seat at the table for dinner") and despite the fact that there are about 20 million lefthanders in America and about 200 million more around the world, the fact remains that sinistrals are at constant odds with the right-handed world.

Oh, there are minor signs of abatement cropping up from time to time; somebody starts a left-handed liberation movement, somebody opens a left-handed store.

Only in sports, notably baseball, has the southpaw gained any wide acceptance, and even there they generally are regarded as sort of on the whacky side. Right-hand hitters usually shuffle their feet nervously, eyes narrowed in distrust, when the other side puts in a portslider to pitch to them; they jam their batting helmets more firmly on their noggins and flex their knees getting ready to take a dive out of the way of the first wild one.

Golf club manufacturers finally are making left-handed clubs in quantity and quality for southpaw golfers, but their number has been estimated as less than 8 per cent of the total participants in the sport.

Hal Wood, United Press International sportswriter, covered a national left-handed golf championship tourney at Pebble Beach in June, 1933, and said he found the experience somewhat unsettling.

"It's an unnerving sight to watch 158 consecutive lefthanders get up to tee off on a golf course," Wood wrote. "Or to sit and play cards with them and their left-handed deals."

Wood said seeing everybody in the field of a tournament facing the wrong direction can be not only startling, but also sort of depressing.

"The lefthanders here admit they not only play left-handed, but think left-handed, too," his story added. "And this is rather discouraging to some."

Authorities say about 10 per cent of the world population is left-handed, but this percentage may be on the increase since modern permissiveness by parents is allowing more children to grow up left-handed. They say the percentage might rise to as high as 35 per cent if children showing left-hand tendencies are not forced to switch.

Meanwhile machines and assembly lines are still being designed for right-handed workmen, and many employers avoid hiring left-handed people on the grounds they are "accident prone." Even in offices, some employers still are reluctant about hiring left-handed secretaries, though they can't seem to give any good reasons why.

The left-handed problem has been the subject of serious study in recent years. Particularly displeasing to southpaws was the theory of psychologist Paul Bakan, faculty member at Simon Frazer University in Barnaby, British Columbia, which was published in 1971. It concludes that lefties really are freaks.

Bakan contends that nature intended all human beings to be right-handed and if it weren't for chance stresses, either during gestation or at birth, there would be no lefties. Left-handedness can't be explained by the theory that it is the work of an obscure gene and therefore hereditary, he says.

He further claims that his studies, based on observation of two student groups of right and lefthanders — roughly 51 per cent female and 49 per cent male — indicate that birth order has something to do with it. Gestational and birth stresses are more likely in women having their first babies and in older women having their fourth or later, he says, so first-born and fourth-babies are more likely to be sinistrals.

My own study group — one lefthander, 100 per cent female — called Bakan's theory a lot of rubbish.

"How do his left-handed students know he isn't a freak?" she said indignantly. "If he wasn't, he'd have been studying something worthwhile, like how to make runless pantyhose or how to make yogurt taste good. How about the people who use either hand equally well? They're at least half left-handed, and nobody calls them freaks."

It occurred to me at this point that the ambidexters might be the biggest freaks of all. "Imagine going through life without even knowing you were right or left-handed," I mused.

"According to something I remember hearing as a child, there's a way you can tell," she said thoughtfully. "It's how you use a shovel. If you put your right foot on it first, you're right-handed."

I started to point out that I wouldn't be caught dead using a shovel in any fashion, but refrained just in time to avoid a snide metaphor. Left-handers are good at these, too.

Shops stock items for the lefty

With Bakan thus summarily dismissed, we turned our attention to another scientific report, this one by Dr. Arthur Falek, chief of the division of human genetics at the Georgia Mental Health Institute. Falek dealt less with what causes left-handedness and more with what people do in correcting it.

He says left-handed children born to "working class" parents, such as those in the construction trades, are more likely to be trained to use their other hand than children born to professional people, and where these parents are left-handed, you find the highest incidence of right-handed children.

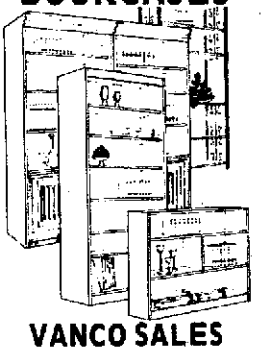

People in the working class have a more realistic appraisal of the problems their children would encounter as a lefty in a right-handed society, Falek says. He cites the case of a left-handed father who couldn't become a postal clerk because he was not able to file letters in slots designed for righthanders. The father retrained his own handedness to be able to take the job, and he made sure his children were right-handed so they would not be handicapped as he had been.

Professional people, Falek says, seldom encounter major problems in their work because they are southpaws. Therefore, they are not so concerned about encouraging their children to be righthanders.

Fortunately for the oppressed but unrepentant type of lefthander, there are people trying to do something about their discomforts and inconveniences besides write about them. For instance Sue Alpert — who has opened a retail outlet in Santa Ana (The Left-Handed Complement) dedicated to items for the lefty.

The Complement stocks left-handed scissors, pens, can openers and all types of kitchen hardware, electric irons, and potholders. You can buy left-handed fishing reels, golf clubs, archery sets and baseball mitts. Or records such as Ravel's Piano Concerto for the Left Hand, or a kitchen clock that runs counter-clockwise, or left-handed notebooks with the spirals on the right. Or even a left-handed mustache cup.

"It is time that the neglect of and discrimination against the left-handed segment of our population, forced to adapt to the ways of the right-handed majority, should be ended," avows The Left-Handed Complement in a letter accompanying its brochure.

My lefthander wanted to know why it should be necessary to have left-handed stores. "It would be simpler just to retrain all the righthanders and end the fuss," she said.

Lefthander Michael Barsley, who wrote a whole book about it (The Left-handed Book, an Investigation into the Sinister History of Left-Handedness) maintains the "fuss" is part of a centuries-old conspiracy to deprive left-handed people of their rights as citizens.

Since the Bible clearly divided the people into sheep and into goats and put the goats on the left, Barslay holds, righthanders have acted as though lefthanders were to be distrusted and despised. But it doesn't seem to worry the author too much.

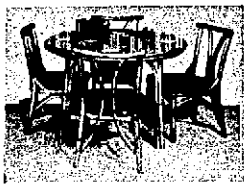

He goes back through history to point with pride to famous figures who were left-handed, citing Ehud of the tribe of Benjamin, who delivered the children of Israel by stabbing the king of Moab with his left hand. Julius Caesar, Alexander the Great, Charlemange, and Benjamin Franklin were lefties. Two of the world's greatest geniuses, Leonardo da Vinci and Michelangelo, both were left-handed. On the other hand, so was Jack the Ripper.

Barslay, who spent 14 years researching his book, crams it full of odd fact and fancy about lefthanders and left-handedness. There is a whole chapter on whether the water in a bathtub goes out in a right-hand or left-hand circle when you pull the plug.

"Under ideal conditions, water north of the equator swirls away anticlockwise, or to the left," Barslay writes. "Water south of the equator swirls happily away to the right."

The main characteristic of lefthanders, the author concludes, is independence. It took him 14 years to reach that conclusion? □

WORKSHOP

Rock around the clock

By STEVE ELLINGSON

This is rocking chair weather. And young or old, everyone enjoys a little rock. Doctors recommend it for the therapeutic value. There's something about that relaxing to-and-fro motion that gets things out of your system. In the old-fashioned rockers, there was a constant mild stimulation to all parts of your body. It was a rocking chair that kept Grandma young. So our motto is ... a rocking chair on every porch and patio in America!

Since it offers so many benefits, why not build one? It's certainly easy to do with our full-sized pattern. Each side is cut from a solid piece of exterior plywood, thus eliminating the joints and giving it great strength. All you have to do is trace the pattern design on plywood, then saw out the parts and assemble them. You may use it with or without the standard-sized pad shown in this picture.

To obtain the full-sized Outdoor Rocker Pattern No. 350, send $1 (add 25 cents per pattern for airmail delivery) by cash, check or money order to:

He's only 18, going on 19 — but he's already acquired 14 years of experience in restaurant work.

His name is Dave Hust and he's the first of Hubert Hust's three sons to work full time on a permanent basis at Hubert's unusually popular downtown cafeterias, 643 Pine Ave. and 218 E. Broadway. Dave works six days a week, putting in more than 50 hours. He works Monday through Friday as assistant chef at the Pine restaurant and also shares the managerial responsibilities with his father. On Sundays he is No. 1 chef at the Broadway restaurant.

I remember Dave well from the days —not too long ago — when he was a small blond youngster with a freshly scrubbed face. Now he's bigger than his father. He's 6 feet tall, weighs 180 and has the muscular shoulders of an athlete. He enjoys all sports. When he has the time, he skis, rides his Honda and plays football, baseball, soccer and tennis.

Like his two brothers, Rick, 22, and Ron, 16, Dave started working for his father at an early age. He was only 5 when he began working two-hour shifts as a bus boy at the original Hubert's Cafeteria on Fourth Street near Long Beach Boulevard. Now he's the fully qualified assistant to Parker Wood, who is top chef at the Pine cafeteria. Dave can do it all — he cooks the 20-pound beef roasts, the turkeys, hams and other entrees. He makes salads and prepares the specialty items for outside parties catered by Hubert's.

Despite the long hours and the heavy pressures of working in extremely busy kitchens, Dave enjoys the restaurant business. Is his father easy or hard to work for? "He's beautiful," says Dave. "A real pleasure . . . "

DAVE HUST
He can do it all

Open every day, Hubert's Cafeterias are famous for their roast beef dinners. The Sunday dinner, $2.25, includes a generous serving of that tender, savory, juicy beef with salad, potato, vegetable, hot fresh roll with butter, beverage and dessert. Other entrees, rich with flavor, include roast lamb, Swiss steak, halibut, baked ham, chicken with dumplings and fried chicken.

IF YOU HAVEN'T been to the Skyroom dining room of the Breakers Hotel for a couple of years, you're in for a very pleasant surprise.

Set off by itself on the west side of the Skyroom, the dining room is one of the most luxurious and glamorous in town. It has walls of glass on three sides, presenting spectacular views of the city and harbor from its unusual vantage point at the top of the tall hotel at 210 E. Ocean Blvd. Many Long Beach residents enjoy taking their out-of-town friends to the Skyroom to enable them to appreciate the beauty of the city during the late afternoon, at twilight or at night when a zillion lights twinkle in the distance.

ROY FERG
Premium prime rib au jus

—CARICATURES BY BILL BUERGE

The dining room has a smart Polynesian decor with thick carpeting and elegant white cloths with red napkins on the tables. The table settings are sparkling and immaculate. The service is by well-trained waitresses and waiters.

And — most important of all — what about the food? I'm happy to report that it's outstanding. Roy Ferg, the Skyroom's new operator and host, maintains the highest standards of food quality and has a top kitchen crew. The prices are most attractive and sensible. One of the most popular entrees is premium roast prime rib of beef au jus — truly beautiful slices — $3.95, with soup du jour or chilled green salad, baked potatos, French fries or rice pilaf; hot fresh rolls and ice cream. Others include golden fried chicken, $3.25; filet of the tenderest Dover sole meuniere, $3.75; handsome halibut steak, $3.95; choice top sirloin steak, $4.50; N.Y. steak, $4.95; beef brochette with rich bordelaise sauce, $4.25, and teriyaki steak, $4.95. The finest filet mignon is used for the brochette and teriyaki.

Roy has also taken charge of the Skyroom's valet parking system. Guests drive their cars to the hotel's front entrance. Attendants then park them on a side lot. Each car is returned to the entrance as soon as the guests are ready to depart.

The Skyroom (closed Mondays) serves dinner starting at 4 p.m. Sundays and at 5 the rest of the time. The spacious lounge has entertainment on weekends featuring a five-piece Dixieland band which plays for ballroom-style dancing.

Medicine & You

By BEN ZINSER
Medical-Science Editor

The problem of an aggressive, hostile bee that attacks humans should be studied by the medical profession, an allergy specialist says.

Dr. Claude A. Frazier of Asheville, N. C., says the United States within a few years may face a situation already in existence in Brazil: a strain of a honey bee known for unprovoked mass stinging and frequent swarming.

The bee is known as the Brazilian honey bee and is a result of a crossing of European and African bees. Dr. Frazier, reporting in Annals of Allergy, says there are many reports of animals and people killed by the stings of the Brazilian bee.

The Brazilian bee is now rapidly extending its range in South America, the doctor reports. He says there are no known geographic or climatic barriers that will prevent its spread into North America.

The area of infestation is moving about 200 miles north a year. Colonies of the bees have already crossed the Amazon River.

Dr. Frazier estimates that the bees will be in Panama within five to 10 years and in Texas eight to 10 years later — sooner if the bees should accidentally be brought into the country.

Unless the migration is halted, doctors will be seeing the rise of more allergic reactions to stings than ever before, he warns.

This new strain of bee could easily survive in the southern areas of the United States, he says.

The Brazilian bees, unlike conventional honey bees, are known to attack humans in swarms, without reason, the doctor says.

In addition, they fly great distances from their hives — so they pose a hazard to areas outside their habitat. And unlike ordinary bees, they frequently swarm and move on to a new location.

Propranolol, a drug customarily used to treat certain heart disorders, has been found to be "very useful" in the treatment of tremors.

The tremors against which the drug is frequently effective are known as action tremors — uncontrolled shaking that occurs when a person attempts to use his muscles.

(In Parkinson's disease, or shaking palsy, tremors occur even when the muscles are at rest.)

Two Harvard University doctors say that propranolol benefited 75 per cent of 24 patients with action tremors. It aided those who were having difficulty in eating or writing.

The doctors say the drug, also known as Inderal, doesn't completely eliminate tremors but does reduce shaking.

Action tremors particularly affect elderly persons.

Details of research with the drug appear in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Researchers, in experiments with rabbits, have been able to prevent contractures, abnormal shortening of muscles, with a drug called thiphenamil hydrochloride.

The method holds promise in preventing contracture deformities after massive burns, say investigators at the University of Arizona College of Medicine in Tucson.

One of the doctors characterized the drug as a "chemical splint," saying it prevents development of contractures as long as it is applied.

A report on the research was presented to the Society of University Surgeons.

A researcher says it now is theoretically feasible to develop a human vaccine against gonorrhea.

Dr. Stephen J. Kraus, senior investigator at the U. S. Center for Disease Control, Atlanta, Ga., says development of such a vaccine should not prove too difficult. Reason: It has been determined that such a vaccine works in animals.

A vaccine has been tested in mice and chimpanzees for over a year. About half the animals were completely protected from reinfection. The others required a 10,000-fold increase in the number of gonorrhea bacteria to become infected.

Says Dr. Kraus: "We therefore feel the preliminary groundwork has been laid for the eventual control with a vaccine of our most prevalent infectious disease."

The gases in cigarette smoke may be just as harmful to health as the tar content, a new study suggests.

Researchers at the Swiss Institute for Experimental Research, Lausanne, Switzerland, studied cultures of hamster lung cells in the laboratory.

Cells exposed to cigarette smoke look "sick" after about four days. In contrast, cells exposed to smoke from which a large part of gases have been removed appeared much healthier.

Gases removed included carbon monoxide, nitrogen dioxide and acrolein, according to a report in Medical World News, a newsmagazine for physicians.

If a skin eruption occurs, did a medication cause it?

Physicians are getting some additional help in finding out whether a drug is to blame — and, if so, which drug.

Drug Therapy, a periodical for physicians, says there's a new book known as "A Guide to Drug Eruptions," by Dr. W. Brunisma (Amsterdam, Excerpta Medica, 1973). The 103-page book costs $10.50, according to the report.

Q. Is there an inexpensive way to achieve a formal look with my draperies?
A. Yes, use a double row of sheers. Average cost of sheers is $3.00 a yard and for a little extra cost you can put a contrasting fringe on your outer drape.
Q. I recently saw 4'x8' mirror sheets that came in several colors and could be sawed, nailed or glued to the wall. Where can I purchase this and how much does it compare with regular glass mirror?
A. The cost is approximately the same as glass mirror but you can save substantially on the installation labor by doing it yourself. We sell this product at the Alamo Center.

JOHN DEAN AND WIFE MAUREEN

Q. President Nixon has accused John Dean of playing a "criminal" role in Watergate, of offering clemency and bribery and coverup to the Watergate defendants. Who brought John Dean into the Justice Department and who made him President Nixon's lawyer?—R.O., Dover, Del.

A. John Dean was a protégé of John Mitchell, President Nixon's friend, law partner, campaign manager and Attorney General. It was Mitchell who sponsored Dean.

Q. Is O. J. Simpson, football star on the Buffalo Bills, leaving football for a movie career?—Peter Underwood, Long Beach, Calif.

A. Simpson, who last season broke the National Football League's rushing record (the first man to gain 2000 yards in a season) has no intention of quitting football. In the off-season, O.J. simply picked up a little spare cash by working in The Klansman with Richard Burton and Lee Marvin.

SPINACH-LOVER: WILLIAM SIMON

Q. Why does the Wall Street crowd call William Simon, the new Secretary of the Treasury, "Popeye"?—Norma Parker, New York City.

A. Simon, multimillionaire former bond salesman for Salomon Brothers, has protruding eyeballs, and like the comics character he is named after, eats creamed spinach by the bucket.

Q. Did Howard Hughes ever keep Gina Lollobrigida a Hollywood love captive? Was Gina ever in love with Dr. Christiaan Barnard, the heart transplanter? How old is Gina anyway, and is she finished in films as a leading lady?—Josephine Flores, Clifton, N.J.

A. Gina, 45, says that in 1950 Howard Hughes sent her a cable in Rome which said, "LET ME MAKE YOU A STAR." Gina explains: "Back then I had just married Dr. Milko Skofic, but I came to Hollywood where Howard insisted that I divorce Milko and marry him. I was locked up in his tremendous mansion for days, but I finally signed a contract, then flew back to Rome and Milko." Of Dr. Barnard, whose first wife published Gina's love letters to her husband, Gina says: "He is an idiot, a cheap publicity-seeker. I am a top film star. I know what publicity is and how it works." Replies Barnard: "She can say anything she likes. I don't care." Gina's film career is on the wane, but recently she has achieved some notoriety as a still photographer.

GINA IN HER ACTING HEYDAY

Q. What's happened to Greer Garson? How many times married?—Frances Crouch, Redlands, Calif.

A. Greer Garson, 65, starred recently on television in the play Crown Matrimonial. She is still married to her third husband, New Mexico rancher Buddy Fogelson. Her other husbands were Edwin Snelson and Richard Ney, who 32 years ago played her son in her most popular film, Mrs. Miniver.

Q. Did Richard Nixon know that Spiro Agnew was "on the take" when he chose him as his running mate in '68? Did he know that Spiro Agnew was taking bribes while he was Vice President of the United States? Why did Agnew keep telling lies up to the last minute, saying "I will not resign. I will not resign"? Also, is it true that the public has paid Agnew's lawyers?—David Evans, Baltimore, Md.

A. Nixon had no idea Agnew was crooked when he accepted him as his running mate. When he learned that Agnew was taking payoff money while still Vice President of the U.S. he had his chief of staff, Gen. Alexander Haig, work on Agnew to resign. Agnew's lies to the American people about not resigning were part of his plea-bargaining technique. Approximately $178,000 of Agnew's legal fees have been paid through public contributions to his defense fund. A superb book, accurate and detailed, on the entire Agnew affair is A Heartbeat Away: The Investigation and Resignation of Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, by Jules Witcover and Richard M. Cohen (published by Viking).

Q. So far in this Administration we have had four U.S. Attorneys General: John Mitchell, Richard Kleindienst, Elliot Richardson, and William Saxbe, and one acting Attorney General, Robert Bork. Which one in your opinion was the best?—E.W.L., Cambridge, Mass.

A. A likely candidate for excellence is Elliot Richardson of whom President Nixon said on April 30, 1973: "As the new Attorney General I have today named Elliot Richardson, a man of unimpeachable integrity . . . I have given him absolute authority to make all decisions bearing upon the Watergate case and related matters . . . he has the authority to name a special supervising prosecutor . . . he will be fearless in pursuing this case wherever it leads."

DIANE SAWYER

Q. Isn't it correct that Henry Kissinger proposed to Diane Sawyer of the White House press staff before he proposed to Nancy Maginnes, the present Mrs. Kissinger?—O.T., McLean, Va.

A. Says Miss Sawyer: "That's absurd, he never proposed—not marriage, anyway."

PARADE'S SPECIAL

INTELLIGENCE REPORT

EDITED by LLOYD SHEARER

BECAUSE OF VOLUME OF MAIL RECEIVED, PARADE REGRETS IT CANNOT ANSWER QUERIES.

IMPEACHMENT POLITICS

Should the House of Representatives vote to send a bill of impeachment to the Senate, President Nixon will need at least 34 Senators to vote "no" if he is to avoid conviction by two-thirds of the Senate. Which 34 Senators can he count on?

In Washington, D.C., their identities constitute one of the most popular guessing and therefore unreliable games of the day.

From a variety of veteran knowledgeable sources, Intelligence Report has compiled a list of crucial Nixonian Senators. It consists of 23 Republican reliables, one independent, and 10 Democrats, all but two from the South. The Democrats most frequently suggested as those who would prevent Nixon's conviction are Sens. Alan Bible and Howard Cannon of Nevada; James Eastland and John Stennis of Mississippi; Bennett Johnston and Russell Long of Louisiana; Sam Nunn and Herman Talmadge of Georgia; John McClellan of Arkansas; James Allen of Alabama. The independent is Sen. Harry Byrd Jr. of Virginia.

As the U.S. Senate is politically constituted, it consists of one independent (Byrd), one Conservative (James Buckley of New York), 41 Republicans, and 57 Democrats.

Impeachment politics is currently the name of the big game, and all Washington is eagerly watching as it is being played out.

KHRUSHCHEV AND CASTRO

The late Nikita Khrushchev was a proud and vain man who believed he had done much for Soviet Russia. When the dumpy, little Russian Premier was ousted from power in 1964 after 10 years as First Secretary of the Communist Party, he was understandably bitter and recriminatory. He disliked intensely being transformed into an unperson.

He retired to his dacha in Petrova-Dalneye outside Moscow, and there, encouraged by friends and family, he began to tape-record his memoirs, ostensibly as a heritage for his grandchildren.

Three years later the tapes were smuggled out of the Soviet Union through channels still unknown, but possibly through the paid connivance of individual officials acting in their own interests.

The tape recordings were offered to Time-Life, Inc., for a large sum of money. After thoroughly and repeatedly authenticating the tapes through voice prints, Time-Life purchased the tapes, then turned them over to one of its correspondents, Strobe Talbott, for translation and editing, no small feat, since Khrushchev was not an organized man who structured his reminiscences in any time or subject frame. He recorded by whim, mood, and when the moment of inspiration struck.

KHRUSHCHEV AND CASTRO IN 1960.

The second and final volume of the Khrushchev memoirs, "Khrushchev Remembers: The Last Testament," will be published by Little, Brown & Co., a Time subsidiary, on June 14.

One of its most fascinating chapters concerns Khrushchev's relationship with Fidel Castro. Khrushchev recalls that he experienced a really tough time persuading Castro to permit the Russian installation of missiles in Cuba in 1962.

According to Khrushchev, the only reason the Soviets wanted to position missiles there was "to give the new progressive system created in Cuba by Fidel Castro a chance to work. Without our missiles on Cuba," he explains, "the island would have been in a position of a weak man threatened by a strong man. I'm not saying we have any documentary proof the Americans were preparing for a second invasion. We didn't need documentary proof. We knew the class affiliations, the class blindness of the U.S., and that was enough to make us expect the worst.

"When Castro and I talked about the problem," he continues, "we argued and argued. Our argument was very heated, but at the end. Fidel agreed with me. Later on he began to supply me with certain data that had come to his attention. 'Apparently what you told me was right,' he said. That in itself justified what we did."

Khrushchev's memoirs are the first indication we have had of Castro's reluctance to allow Cuba to be used as a pawn by the Soviet Union in its attempt to secure a nuclear missile emplacement in this hemisphere. Castro was afraid that it would surely stimulate an immediate attack by the Americans.

Khrushchev held, however, that he would remove the missiles if President Kennedy agreed not to invade Cuba; and that was the deal he successfully negotiated.

The result: Cuba today is Communist and Fidel Castro remains its Communist leader. Khrushchev pulled it off as he promised he would.

WORSE ENERGY SHORTAGE PREDICTED

Within two years the United States is going to suffer far worse oil shortages than it endured during the Arab petroleum embargo.

So warns Dr. Philip Abelson, editor of "Science," a publication of the 130,000-member American Association for the Advancement of Science.

"I feel," writes Dr. Abelson in a "Science" editorial, "that the American public is not taking the problem seriously enough." Abelson contends that the nation's energy problems are critical and lasting and that this country will need large quantities of imported oil just to meet the constantly increasing demand for gasoline.

The end of the Arab oil boycott does not mean the end of America's energy shortage. It simply provides us, he suggests, with a temporary breathing spell of which we should take advantage.

MINORITY REPRESENTATION

Blacks, Poles, Italians and Latins comprise 33.7 percent of metropolitan Chicago's 6.979 million population. Yet, according to a study conducted by Russell Barta, professor of social science at Mundelein College in Chicago, the members of these minority groups exercise few decision-making positions in the city's big business community.

By studying Chicago's 106 largest corporations through interviews and annual reports, Prof. Barta discovered that "while the Italians were more numerous in the executive suite than the other three groups, 84 corporations out of the 106 still had no directors who were Italians, and 75 had no corporate officers who were Italians.

"Ninety-seven had no officers who were Polish; only one corporation had a black officer, and only two had Latin officers. Fifty-five of the corporations had no officers or directors from any of the four ethnic groups."

The corporations that were surveyed last fall included banks, retailers, utilities, savings and loan institutions and others chosen on a size rating by "Fortune" magazine and two Chicago dailies.

THE FOOD SHORTAGE

One reason for the inequitable distribution of food throughout the world is that the developed nations --the U.S., Germany, Japan, Canada, etc.--have too much money and spend it on more than their fair share of the available food supply.

While the underdeveloped nations have millions of people who starve, the developed nations have millions of people who can afford quantity, quality and variety in their food.

For example, to produce one barrel of beer; U.S. brewers use 44 pounds of malt, barley and other grains. In 1972, U.S. breweries produced 140 million barrels of beer, or two-thirds of a barrel for every person in the country.

They also used another 200 million pounds of grain, most of it corn, to produce 73 million gallons of whiskey and other alcoholic spirits.

According to agricultural experts, the amount of grain used annually to produce alcoholic beverages in this country would keep half a million people in South Asia alive for a year.

MORE THAN NECESSARY

Denmark has more physicians than it needs. Worse yet, it is adding to the surplus. Of almost 500 who were graduated from medical school this past February, 175 could not find jobs in Denmark. This summer another 400-500 will be graduated.

In the past, many young Danish doctors sought and found employment in nearby Sweden, but now Sweden has a surplus of physicians, too.

One of the most acute shortages of medical doctors is found in the U.S. Indian Health Service. Perhaps our government should fly a Boeing 747 jumbo over to Denmark, return with the available young Danish doctors, and offer them jobs on our Indian reservations.

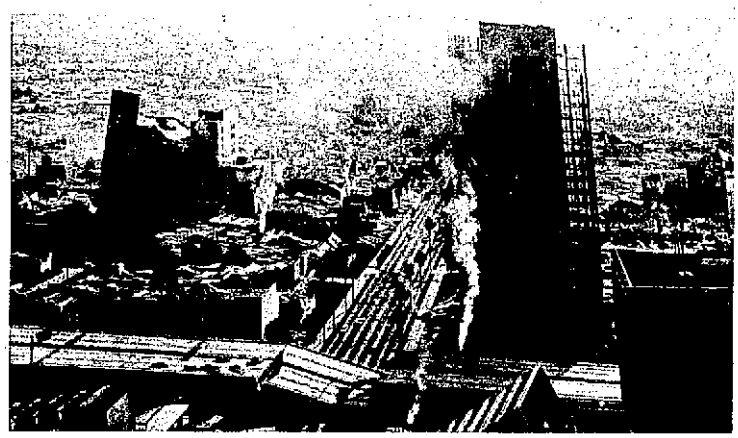

FAMILIES WITH A RETARDED CHILD

When a retarded child is born into a family, what effect does that child have on family life?

Three researchers studied the problem and wrote about it in "The Journal of Marriage and the Family."

They reveal that the most significant effect is on parental activity within the neighborhood. Parents who have a retarded child visit neighbors less frequently than those who don't. The mother of a retarded child is most burdened, but the social isolation associated with retarded children frequently produces greater marital solidarity. The retarded child serves as a binding familial influence.

The three researchers, Ronald McAllister, Edgar Butler and Tzuen Jen-lei, studied 1000 white families in a city in Southern California. Of the 2305 children in their sample, 360 from 281 families were classified as behaviorally retarded.

A VIEW OF LOS ANGELES IN MOCK-UP FOR THE MOVIE 'EARTHQUAKE.'

THE EARTHQUAKE BOOK

Between 1932 and 1972 more than 15,340 earthquakes occurred in Southern California.

With the aid of a computer, a 494-page book, the most complete record available on Southern California earthquake data, has now been co-authored by Clarence Allen, a geology professor; James Hileman, a graduate student, and John Nordquist, a research engineer, all of the California Institute of Technology.

The book lists all earthquakes of magnitude 2 or higher on the Richter scale over a 40-year period. It details their exact location, time, depth and magnitude.

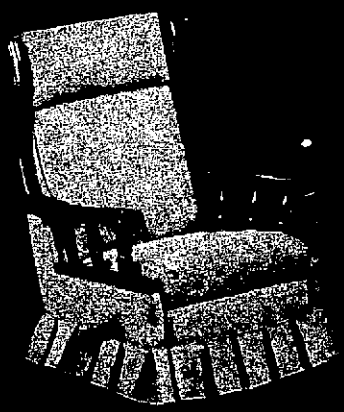

It reveals that the most seismically active parts of Southern California are the Imperial and Coachella valleys through which run major branches of the San Andreas fault system.

And it shows that although earthquakes occur over wide sections of Southern and Baja California, their frequency diminishes east toward the Colorado River.

Universal Pictures is spending $6 million to produce a film, "Earthquake" with Ava Gardner, Charlton Heston, Lorne Greene, Lloyd Nolan, and half a dozen other big names. The highlight of the film, however, is the special-effects sequence which shows Los Angeles when an earthquake strikes and Hollywood Dam, north of the city, ruptures.

The 18-22 phase—often they live away from home and think about cutting family ties.

22-28—want a successful marriage and feel "now" is the time to live, grow and build.

53-60—a time of mellowing and better relationships, but also of self-examination.

The Cycle of Life

by Connecticut Walker

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

Does adulthood really exist or is it a legal fiction? Do people reach maturity at 18, 21, or even 51, and then stop changing?

Dr. Roger Gould, assistant professor of psychiatry at UCLA's Neuropsychiatric Institute, finds that people do indeed change and develop throughout adulthood. "It's not a period of marking time," explains Gould. "Adulthood consists of developmental stages much like those of childhood and adolescence. It's a time of active and systematic change."

Gould's theory is based on a five-year comparative study of out-patients at UCLA's Neuropsychiatric Institute and a non-patient group. Through observation and questionnaire, he learned that adults generally pass through seven different developmental stages, or time-zones. Each time-zone carries with it certain conflicts, joys, fears, and beliefs. The seven phases of adulthood are herewith outlined. Which one are you in?

- The 16-18-year-old has a strong desire to get away from his parents, but he does not act upon this wish. His autonomy is precarious, often reinforced by negativism and is easily eroded from moment to moment.
- The 18-22-year-old feels halfway out of the family and worries about being reclaimed. Members of this age group are often living away at school, working, paying rent, owning their cars, but they are not totally committed to leaving their families. The peer group becomes an important ally in their struggle to cut their family ties.
- Among 22-28-year-olds there is a considerable shift. They feel established, autonomous and separate from the family. They believe their activities are worthwhile and feel "now" is the time for living, growing and building. Peers are still important, but self-reliance is paramount. They are committed to making their marriages work.
- Those in the 29-34-year-old group begin to question what they are doing. They feel weary of being what they are supposed to be, but they continue. They have a poignant desire to be accepted by the spouse "for what I am." At the same time, they want to accept their children for what they're becoming and not impose roles on them. During the early 30's, however, life appears much more difficult than it appeared in the 20's.
- For 35-43-year-olds time seems to constrict. Individuals in this age bracket feel there is little time left to shape the behavior of their adolescent children and even less time to "make it" in their own careers. At this stage, their own parents turn toward them. There is a muffled renewal of old conflicts which are suppressed by the thought that their parents are getting older and time is running out for them. It also seems increasingly difficult to make marriages work, to communicate with their spouse. The predominant feeling is that there is still time but one must hurry to make some dreams come true.
- In the 43-53 period, individuals tend to feel "the die is cast," and view life with some bitterness. They criticize their parents and blame them for their problems. They are also ready to find fault with their nearly adult children. From their spouse, however, they seek sympathy and affection in a way that resembles a much earlier dependence upon their parents.
- Among 53-60-year-olds the negative feelings of the 40's diminish. Relationships with themselves, their parents, children and friends become warmer and more mellow. Marital happiness and contentment continue to increase. The spouse becomes a valuable companion and less a parent. They feel less responsible and less critical of their children and begin to consider their approval as worthy. During this adult phase, however, they question the meaninglessness of life and review their own contribution to the world. They also concentrate on petty annoyances and their own health.

"My data suggest," says Gould, "that not only does adulthood consist of a series of tasks to be performed, but there exists an actual time-clock which is thoroughly universal and thoroughly regular which defines the task at hand.

"The fact that you're 40 or 43 years old, for example, really does affect the way you view life and the decisions you make. When you reach 50, your perspective changes.

Dr. Roger Gould, professor of psychiatry, says adults generally develop in seven specific stages, or time-zones.

Inner life frozen

"It is possible to live for all outward appearances in one time-zone but have an inner life frozen in a previous one," adds Gould. "Consider, for example, a 40-year-old divorcée who continually chooses unreliable partners, because they're exactly what her mother wouldn't want for her. She lives a child-life, acting out fantasies of revenge on her mother. She's looking for partners whom she cannot marry but with whom she retains illusions of childhood. Nevertheless, she feels sad and frightened when she realizes she's no longer a child.

"While this case illustrates an extreme example of time reversal, we all struggle against time," Gould declares. "Throughout adulthood we continually face challenges to give up preferred earlier beliefs about the world."

Dr. Gould's phases-of-adulthood theory comprises something of a road map to the future. Like all maps, it serves as a guide and reference, reassuring its followers that they're traveling along well-beaten paths.

"I hope my theory takes adulthood out of the realm of the mysterious, the unknowable, the unconquerable and puts a frame around it," concludes Gould. "I hope it enables people to feel that they share some common ground with the rest of humanity."

cheese soup

PARADE FOOD EDITOR

Jeanne Jones watches her diet—but that doesn't stop her from enjoying gourmet dishes like this tangy cheese soup.

LA JOLLA, CALIF.

Jeanne Jones is a tall, slim, glamorous woman who enjoys cooking just as much as she loves eating gourmet meals—and she's always dieting. Not for her figure, but for her health: Six years ago she discovered she had diabetes.

"I felt my life was ruined," says Jeanne. "How could I give lovely dinner parties without sugar, practically no fats and measured amounts of everything else?" Using her experience in French cooking schools and working with dietitians, she came up with a cookbook for diabetics, called "The Calculating Cook" (101 Productions: $6.95, hardcover; $3.95, paperback). One typically delicious recipe is for "Monterey Jack Cheese Soup," a protein-rich, low-calorie luncheon idea.

MONTEREY JACK CHEESE SOUP

½ cup finely chopped onion
1 large, ripe tomato, peeled and diced
2 large canned or fresh green chilies, veins and seeds removed, chopped
½ garlic clove, minced
1 cup chicken stock
1½ cups medium white sauce
1½ cups milk
¼ teaspoon salt
Dash freshly ground black pepper
1½ cups grated Monterey Jack cheese (or any semi-soft mild cheddar)

Put the chopped onion, diced tomato, chopped chilies and garlic in a saucepan with chicken stock and simmer until the vegetables are tender. Remove from heat. Slowly stir in white sauce, stirring constantly. Add the milk slowly. Add salt, pepper and cheese. Simmer over low heat, stirring until cheese melts. Serve immediately. Makes six servings.

Los Angeles policewoman Betsy Gray, also on today's cover, says, when "a woman blows her whistle, it frightens the devil out of an assailant."

Defend Yourself With a Whistle

by Lloyd Shearer

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

Two years ago a pair of thinking officers in the Los Angeles Police Department, Capt. Robert Tucker and Lt. Burt Dole, came up with a cheap, practical, and traditional crime-prevention device—the whistle.

Aware that muggers, thieves, and rapists are frightened by noise, the officers suggested that whistles be distributed to women in their neighborhood, which happens to be the Wilshire Division.

It was a timely and useful suggestion, except that the Los Angeles Police Department, like most others, does not include in its budget any allowance for the purchase and distribution of free whistles to the public.

Tucker and Dole, therefore, presented their idea to the Wilshire Community Police Council, which consists of community business leaders. These civic-minded men went along with the idea, purchased the whistles wholesale, contributed them to the Wilshire Division of the police department.

The police sell the whistles for 50 cents each, donate the profit to neighborhood charities.

In the past two years they have sold 20,000 whistles, and the practice has caught on so well that a few weeks ago it was adopted by the Rampart Division and hopefully will spread to other divisions within Los Angeles and then to other cities throughout the nation.

Officer Betsy Gray, who has been on the Los Angeles police force for 12 years, says, "A whistle, carried on a key chain or dangling from a neck chain is just about the most simple and handy device a woman can use.

Afraid of attention

"Over the years I've had quite a lot of experience with potential purse-snatchers and rapists," she explains, "and I can tell you that once a woman blows her whistle, it frightens the devil out of an assailant. He's afraid it will attract attention or that other people will gather and stop him. Blowing a whistle loudly and running is frequently the best combined action a woman, or for that matter, anyone in danger, can take."

The Los Angeles Police Department has several letters on file from residents who have used the whistles for protection or crime prevention.

"One woman," recounts Sgt. Charles Meyerhoff, "was walking along Wilshire Boulevard when she observed two men fighting. Immediately she blew her whistle vigorously. The men looked around and stopped fighting. An investigation revealed that one of the men was a security guard from a nearby store, and the other man was a shoplifting suspect. 'When I heard that whistle,' the suspect later told police, 'I thought you guys were there so I gave up.' "

Another case involved a widow, living alone, who heard a loud noise at her front window at 2 a.m. She reached for her whistle, which she keeps on her nightstand, and started blowing it.

She then quickly phoned the police. When the officers arrived they saw that someone had removed the screen from her bedroom window, had attempted to pry open the window lock. The loud noise of the whistle, they concluded, had frightened the criminal away.

Much crime unreported

That violent crime is on the rise in almost all urban areas of the nation is apparently undeniable. A recent Justice Department report declares that actual crime is two to three times higher than reported crime in Detroit, Chicago, New York, and Los Angeles, and a shocking five times higher than crime reported in Philadelphia.

The Justice Department report, which cost some $10 million, is based on interviews conducted by census takers with 25,000 people and 2000 businesses in the five largest U.S. cities.

It sounds incredible, but in 1972 almost 80 percent of all the businesses in Detroit were burglarized and almost a third of the city's homes targeted for robbery.

Where not to go

The report, commissioned by the national crime panel of the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA), also shows that in 1972 Detroit had the highest rate of serious crimes (murder excluded) in the nation with 68 per 1000 persons; Philadelphia 63 per 1000; Chicago 56; Los Angeles 53; and New York 36 per thousand.

Other findings in the report show Los Angeles and Philadelphia leading in assault rates with 34 per 1000, trailed by Detroit with 33, Chicago 26, and New York with 10.

According to Donald Santarelli, chief administrator of the LEAA, the survey proves that American citizens don't report crime "because it isn't worth it, they don't believe the criminal justice system works well enough to make it worthwhile . . . we must try to turn them on again. We must bring consumerism to criminal justice."

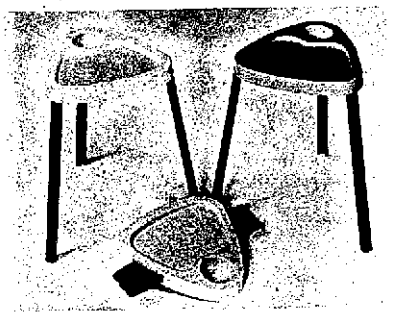

Perhaps the federal government should issue whistles to all its consumers. That seems to be one way of reporting a crime, impending or taking place, and simultaneously frightening the criminal away.

my favorite jokes

by charles lindner

EDITOR'S NOTE: Charles Lindner's comedy is reserved for a very special audience, the senior citizens, and this "comedian to the geriatric set," as he is called, is busy performing year round—mostly in New York and its environs—in senior citizens' residences, in hospitals, for church and synagogue Golden Age Clubs, for the Salvation Army, etc.

Because his audiences are so special Lindner's tuned in to their favorite comedy topics which he lists as "senior citizens, children, and sex, in that order." And for audiences in which the age range is 65 to 107, the average being 83, he gets some quick, well-timed responses. "Recently at the close of my act," he says, "I told a nursing-home audience 'I hope you get better,' whereupon an 86-year-old patient shouted, 'I hope you do, too!'"

Lindner has performed for club dates, and conventions and on TV and radio. Here are some more of his jokes and stories:

Ad in a local newspaper: "For sale, complete set of encyclopedia—never used—my wife knows everything!"

A bum stops an elderly stout lady and says, "Can you spare 50 cents? I haven't eaten in four days." The stout lady replies, "Gee, I wish I had your will power."

A man being interviewed by reporters on his 105th birthday was asked: "To what do you attribute your good health?"

"I don't know yet," he replied, "I'm still dickerin' with two breakfast cereal companies."

A mother was complaining after church service that the church was hot, the choir sang off-key, and the sermon was terrible, whereupon her 5-year-old daughter said: "Mama, what do you expect for the nickel you put in the collection plate?"

orders elephant-ear sandwich on a bun. The waitress returns from the kitchen and tells the customer that he won the $50. The customer says, "No elephant ears, eh?" The waitress replies, "No, sir, we're all out of buns."

A wife goes to the police station with a woman friend to report that her husband has been missing for seven days. The desk sergeant asks for the name and description. "My husband's name is Edward King, he's 45 years old, 6 foot 3, has blue eyes, blond hair, an athletic build, weighs 185, is soft-spoken, and good to the children." When they leave the station house Mrs. King's friend says, "Your husband is 5 foot 3, chubby, bald, has a big mouth, and is mean to your children. Mrs. King replies, "I know, and who wants him back?"

A Symposium:

What Officers in our Armed Forces think of today's vital questions

by Donald Robinson

What are the chances of a military coup in the U.S.?

Do military men hate civilians? Do they really believe in détente between the United States and the Soviet Union?

What's their opinion of Watergate?

Questions like these are being asked with increasing frequency in this post-Vietnam era, when the military establishment is undergoing persistent criticism and the nation itself is plagued by greater doubts and confusion than for a century past.

How do military men themselves think of the current state of the United States, and how do they visualize their own role? Is the nation's security, both internal and external, safe in their hands?

To get the answers to urgent questions like these, I visited the Army War College at Carlisle Barracks, Pa.; the Naval War College at Newport, R.I., and the Air War College in Montgomery, Ala. These are the institutions that are training the most promising officers in all three services for top command—the colonels, lieutenant colonels and commanders who'll be the four-star generals and admirals of tomorrow. I talked to them freely, and they answered my questions frankly. From their replies I've put together what I believe is a clear and complete picture of how our top military officers of the future feel about our country and its future.

Dedicated to democracy

First of all, we can be reassured on one crucial point—we need have no fear that a military junta will seize control of the U.S. government. The vast majority of officers are deeply dedicated to the democratic form of government. They agree that a military putsch is inconceivable because respect for civilian authority is too deeply ingrained in the minds of American officers. Said Col. Leonard W. Johnson, an Air Force flight surgeon: "We professional military men have too much appreciation for the system under which we grew up to want to reverse it. There is nothing that makes us feel we need to overthrow, disrupt or upset the basic constitutional structure of this country."

Added Vice Admiral Stansfield Turner, the President of the Naval War College: "The basic dedication of the officer corps to supporting the U.S. Constitution over all these years gives us a foundation that would take a long period of erosion or an awfully big upheaval to wear away."

"What about a civilian coup?" I asked a group of officers. "Suppose some President says: 'I have no more use for Congress. It isn't doing its job. As Commander-in-Chief, I order you to march up Capitol Hill, surround Congress, and send them home.' What would you do?"

An Air Force colonel spoke for everyone when he answered: "I've explored that question in my mind many times. If an official order came down through the chain of command stating that the President wanted us to 'go up the Hill,' I'd refuse to obey, even if it meant a court-martial."

"This would be the time I'd resign, right there," put in another Air Force colonel. "If it's a coup," added an Air Force officer, "I'd say the hell with it."

Are most officers far to the right politically?

Not today, I was assured. Col. Lewis S. Sorley, a thoughtful Army officer, pointed out: "A very high percentage of the senior officers in the services have now attended graduate schools at hundreds of civilian universities. They have come into contact with the thinking of a wide assortment of faculty people and students, and their views have inevitably been shaped by this experience."

Effective safeguard

Many officers emphasized that the partition of our Armed Forces into three separate services constitutes an effective safeguard against any coup. It would be difficult for any one clique to get control of all the services, they maintained. Furthermore, they pointed out, the civilian components of the Armed Forces—the National Guard and the Reserves—would almost certainly take up arms to resist a putsch.

Some of the views the officers hold on other matters might not fall so easily on civilian ears, however. Many officers candidly concede that deep antagonism toward civilians developed in military quarters during the last years of the Vietnam war. They blamed this on the indignities to which they were subjected—an Air Force officer told of obscenities shrieked at him by a stranger, a Navy man said his daughter had been ostracized at college because of his profession, one officer recalled a student assembly at an Eastern university during which bloody chicken entrails were poured on the caps of military men invited to speak.

Watergate is one issue on which officers of the three services split

Fortunately, the officers said, civilian attitudes have undergone a change, and so have theirs. Col. Hervey S.Stockman, an Air War College student who was a Vietnam POW, reported receiving a friendly reception recently at an Ivy League school which had been repeatedly rocked by anti-war demonstrations. "The country wasn't listening two years ago," commented Col. Gerald E. Galloway. "Now the mood is much quieter, and we've all gotten together again."

Distrust press and TV

Many officers retain a distrust of press and television news. To the question "Do you believe what you read in the papers or see on TV?" the answer invariably was "no."

"The press is essentially anti-military," commented a Navy officer.

Another common belief is that television coverage of the Vietnam war broke the will of the American people to fight.

"A terrible threat of futility went through the TV news of Vietnam," said an Army officer. "According to TV, nothing that happened in Vietnam could possibly work out. That isn't what I saw there."

What about Watergate? This was one of the rare instances in which the services split. Most of the Army and Navy officers said they were horrified by President Nixon's role, and felt he should resign—but not so the Air Force officers.

Strong feeling

Naval officers seem especially strong in urging that the President leave his office. Said one Navy commander: "If my crew felt about me the way we feel about President Nixon, I would either be removed or have to leave because I would have absolutely no organization left." An Army lieutenant colonel says: "As a citizen I'm disgusted by the goings-on in Washington."

But the Air Force officers took a diametrically different position. "Watergate doesn't bother me one iota," said an Air Force lieutenant colonel."If you ask me, it was just dirty politics, friend, the way it's been played all along. I think the President should gut it out." Another Air Force officer put it this way: "It was a case of staff members getting involved without the President's knowledge. I wish it had never happened, but I really can't get excited about it."

Vice Admiral Stansfield Turner, head of the Naval War College, cites the "basic dedication of the officer corps to supporting the U.S. Constitution."

Col. Leonard W. Johnson, Air Force flight surgeon: "We have too much appreciation for a system under which we grew up to want to reverse it."

Col. Gerald Galloway feels civilian and military attitudes have changed: "Now the mood is much quieter and we've all gotten together again."

Col. Hervey S. Stockman who was a Vietnam POW, tells of the friendly reception at Ivy League school once rocked by anti-war demonstrations.

I polled the group and found that 100 percent of the Air Force officers wanted Nixon to complete his eight years in the White House. The most plausible explanation for the divergent view in the services is strong Air Force support for Nixon for securing the release of the POW's—most of whom were fliers—from North Vietnam.

I stirred up a hornet's nest when I asked if the United States had lost the Vietnam war.

"What do you mean by 'losing'?" an Army officer snapped at me. "South Vietnam is not under Communist or Northern domination today. That's about all we went in for." Added a Navy man bitterly: "The military can't be blamed for not completely winning the war because they weren't allowed to pursue it in a really aggressive way. If the civilian authorities had really wanted us to, we could easily have defeated North Vietnam. We could have simply wiped them out."

Both Army and Navy officers expressed faith in the détente between the United States and the Soviet Union. But once again, the Air Force men tended to differ. "There's evidence that the Russians haven't stopped building their military power," said an Air Force officer. "We think the détente is leading us down the primrose path to a point where we may never recover militarily enough to defend the nation."

Air Force officers don't have too much confidence in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, either. Of the NATO nations the U.S. can count only on England, Germany and Belgium in case of a showdown with the U.S.S.R., they thought.

Officers of all three services are concerned about the end of the draft and the establishment of an all-volunteer army. They contend that the enlistment rate is dangerously below Pentagon requirements, that many recruits have low intelligence and educational status, and that there's a lack of enlistees with critically needed skills.

Many also express concern about the high proportion, relative to the general population, of black recruits. They say that the enlisted ranks now number 19 percent black, and that the figure is headed to 26 or 27 percent.

Fears alienation

"When you have an Army that is largely black," cautions one officer, "it's going to be alienated from the population, and the population will be alienated from it." Some urged that the Army institute a quota system in its recruiting to achieve a more representative racial balance. Most seemed wholeheartedly committed to battling racial prejudice inside their services, and the Army men said it was important to overcome a shortage of black officers—now only 2 or 3 percent of the officer corps. They said industry was outbidding the military for the services of leadership-qualified blacks.

The majority of officers felt that a resumption of the draft or some form of universal military service is essential to bring the Army up to strength. To my surprise, every officer was willing to permit some type of alternative service so that a young man who didn't wish to go into the military could work in environmental activities, medical care for the poor, or similar undertakings.

Navy men said their service is acting to end sex discrimination, pointing out that the first woman naval aviator has just won her wings. A big dispute now, they said, is whether Navy women should go into combat.

"I can picture a woman on the bridge of my destroyer and I don't dread it," a Navy officer said. "What I dread is the social upheaval on my ship."

The consensus is that they should be allowed to fly in combat, do destroyer duty, and serve in submarines. But the officers split 50-50 on the question of whether women should be admitted to Annapolis.

Hopeful on defenses

I asked each service group what state our defenses are in. Each branch was hopeful. The Air Force officers said they could handle any threat anywhere. The Navy officers said that the Russian Navy has warships and equipment, but that man for man we excel.

And the Army? After 10 years of Vietnam, the officers make no rash promises, but they're staunch. Lt. Col. Donald P. Shaw summed up: "If you mean can we singlehandedly defeat every Russian east and west of the Urals, I don't know. But if you mean are our soldiers capable of operating their weapons and will they fight, you're damned right they will. Is the Army ready, you ask. The real question is: Is the country ready?"

Keeping Up... With Youth

by Pamela Swift

No Devil, She

Most child actresses have one-picture careers in Hollywood these days—largely because the studios make so few films, and no longer place actors or actresses under contract.

It's not like it was a few decades ago when Mickey Rooney, Shirley Temple, Judy Garland, Elizabeth Taylor, Jackie Cooper and other kids, signed to long-term contracts, were cast in five or six films per year.

Now it's a picture-by-picture deal. If a child gets one film a year —that's great, which is exactly what Linda Blair has managed to do.

Linda is the 16-year-old who plays the tormented 12-year-old possessed by the devil in The Exorcist, one of the most violent, frightening and sexually explicit films of last year.

Linda, from Westport, Conn., was nominated for an Oscar for her performance in that film, and on the basis of her nomination has now won another role. She will play one of the passengers in Airport 1975, the story of a 747 jumbo jet, which is hit in flight by a smaller plane. Others in the film are Gloria Swanson, Joan Blondell, Nancy Olson, and a group of Hollywood veterans. But Linda will surely hold her own against the competition. Although her acting experience is limited to a few TV commercials and The Exorcist, the girl has acting talent—even though at this age she says, "I would rather become a veterinarian or a jockey."

LINDA BLAIR OF "THE EXORCIST"

THE ARMY:
AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY EMPLOYER

Womanizing the Armed Forces

As the all-volunteer Army becomes more difficult to achieve in this country, the military is reviewing its policies toward women, especially since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that women in the service are entitled to receive the same benefits for their dependents as men.

James Schlesinger, the Secretary of Defense, insists that "it will certainly be my policy to eliminate all unnecessary distinction in regulations applying to servicewomen and to assure that women are accorded both equal opportunity and equal treatment in the military."

The Armed Services would like to have 93,500 women in uniform by fiscal 1975. It now has 75,000.

In order to meet its figure, the Pentagon has begun a psychologically oriented advertising program. For the women's libbers, there's a slogan which asks, "Who says men don't listen when a woman talks?" For those who are husband-hunting or prefer travel, there are slogans which offer "A new life and new world of travel," "Find yourself that special look," "You in Navy blue" and many others.

In the past five years women enlistees in the Air Force have increased 132 percent, young high school girls in the ROTC have increased almost 100 percent, and 5147 women this past year have signed up for college ROTC programs.

According to one Army recruiter who understandably prefers to remain nameless, "I think with a little effort we could turn the U.S. Army into the first all-women army in our history."

The Youth Market

There are 41 million people in this country between 14 and 25 years of age, and they buy 80 percent of the recordings. So says George Mihaly, president of Gilbert Youth Research.

At this year's convention of recording merchandisers held in Hollywood, Fla., Mihaly revealed that youth today spends an astounding total of $135 billion yearly. And quite naturally, every retailer wants a piece of it.

Of the 41 million youths, about 16 million attend high schools, and another 9 million, colleges.

Ninety percent read magazines, 84 percent watch TV, 85 percent read newspapers, and 93 percent listen to the radio.

According to Mihaly, most of them consider a record their first choice of purchase, and they are particularly shrewd buyers. They look for discounts, consider all list prices suspect, and their musical tastes cover a broad spectrum from country to jazz, with a temporary accent on the nostalgic.

Date Preferences

What kind of guys do coeds prefer to date—the physically domineering or the gentle type?

On the basis of an experiment with 40 male and 40 female undergraduates, Dr. John Touhey of Florida Atlantic University, writing in the British Journal of Social and Clinical Psychology, concludes that physical domination by the male increases a girl's romantic interest in a man if he is thought to be successful, but decreases if he is regarded as a comparative failure.

Shakespeare Royal Maroons: when you're ready to stop playing the field and start catching fish!

Maybe you already own some pretty good reels. But, we're not talking "pretty good." We're talking "best": Shakespeare's American-made Royal Maroons, just about the finest spinning reels that any money can buy. Never fished with a spinning reel? You'll be amazed at the difference in retrieve power. Take the 2052NL.. Now you're in charge, not the fish. Because this palm-size powerhouse has all the guts in the world to wear down any scrapper you're liable to hook. And 4.7-to-1 gear ratio brings line in fast. As for its bigger brother, the 2062NL, few fish ever lived that could best it in a fair fight. That goes for fresh and salt-water fighters, too. Both reels give you exclusive 6-D drag, stainless-steel bail, on-off non-reverse lever, folding crank, baked epoxy finish and dozens of other fish-catching features. Face it. If you're a fisherman, sooner or later you'll own a Shakespeare Royal Maroon. Why not get better sooner?

Striped Bass. Fresh and salt-water anglers alike love this baby. You can hit striped bass in the open sea, in coastal bays and harbors, rivers leading inland and deep fresh-water lakes. They are often taken on deep-running plugs and rigged baits. "Stripers" weighing twenty pounds are not uncommon and many as heavy as fifty pounds have been caught. We hope you land your next "Striper," but remember, if you don't intend to take him home, remove the hook gently and return him to the water immediately. That's giving him better than a sporting chance.

Just two ball bearing-mounted helical gears give husky retrieve power and velvet smoothness.

Long acclaimed the best! Shakespeare's exclusive 6-D drag is cushion-smooth, thanks to six metal and leather discs.

FISHING TACKLE DIVISION

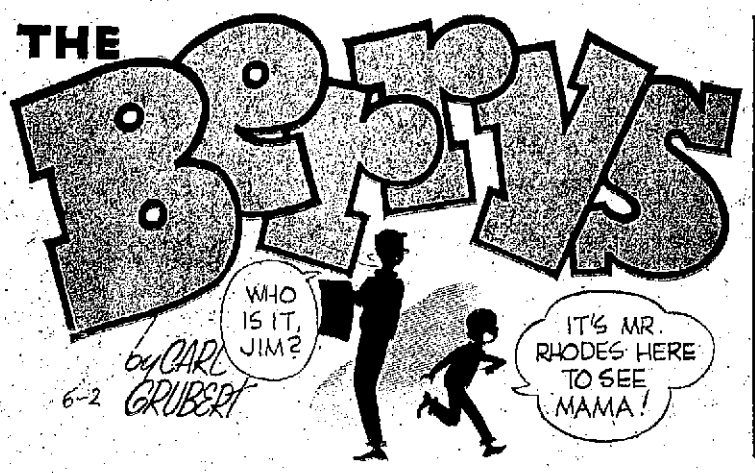

Big Brothers! Big water makes for big fish, and you need a reel that's up to the task, like the Sea Wonder* 2091A with its big line capacity of 250 yards of 20-pound test mono. Or you may prefer the somewhat smaller 2081A. Both feature 3.2-to-1 gear ratio. Both can beat those big water killers.
